Island Fares 'Fine Tuned'

The B.C. government has quietly rolled back ferry fares by 25 per cent on the Tsawwassen-Gulf Islands run in an effort to "fine tune" ferry rates, a B.C. Ferries official said today.

Bill Bouchard, assistant traffic manager, said the decreases, which took effect Friday, will bring uniformity to the fare structure for the Gulf Islands.

Passengers now pay the regular price of $4 a person and $10 a car for the trip to the islands from Tsawwassen but are charged only $2 and $5 respectively for the return trip.

Bouchard said the rates were reduced to reflect the shorter trip of the islands run compared with the Tsawwassen to Swartz Bay route.

The reductions were unannounced.

A ferry spokesman said earlier the rate was not reduced on the trip to the Gulf Islands because passengers then would have been able to ride the remaining distance to Victoria free on the Gulf Islands-Swartz Bay ferries.

Passenger Pat Fraser said she knew of no plans for fare reductions on other routes.

B.C. Ferries newest ship, the Queen of Coquitlam, made its first run today with one deck empty because the provincial construction strike has delayed completion of a new loading ramp.

Heavy Fighting Rages Throughout Beirut

BANG: YOU'RE DEAD ... AND HE WAS

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Taking a loaded .357 magnum pistol from a kitchen table, a 3-year-old child, aided by his brother only two years older, fatally wounded 7-year-old Jeffrey Krauch in the chest Sunday from point blank range.

A friend of the slain child, Marie Barcroft, 9, said the youngster first threatened her, but she thought the gun was only a toy.

"He just came up to us and pointed this gun in my face and said, 'I'm going to shoot you and I'm not going to miss,'" Marie said. "I thought it was just play."

"He didn't even say nothing to Jeff," she said. "He just pointed the gun. His brother cocked it and the little boy pulled the trigger."

"Jeffrey just stood there for a moment with a big hole in his stomach and blood all over the place," she said. "Then he fell over."

White House Invader Shot

WASHINGTON (AP) — A man carrying a three-foot section of pipe climbed over the White House fence late Sunday and was fatally shot by a guard when he failed to heed orders to halt, a Secret Service spokesman said.

The man, identified as Chester Plummer, 30, of Washington, died at George Washington Hospital soon after being admitted, the spokesman said.

John Carlson, deputy White House press secretary, said President Ford was in the second floor family quarters of the White House at the time. He had no immediate comment.

Jack Warner, a member of the Secret Service, said Plummer set off an alarm when he scaled the fence and a member of the Executive Protection Service went to investigate.

Warner said Plummer was fatally wounded by a single shot after he disregarded repeated orders to stop. He was about 60 feet inside the fence when the shot was fired.

He was "apparently a loner who was estranged from his family," police said today.

Sgt. Robert Sharkey, head of the D.C. police investigation of the shooting incident, said little was known about Plummer. Chester Plummer, Sr., identified the body of his son.

A witness said the man climbed over the fence on the Pennsylvania Avenue side of the White House and was carrying a three-foot section of pipe that he was using as a cane.

Ten world records tumbled, East Germany climbed to the top of the gold-medal list and a few unheralded athletes scored upsets in an action-packed weekend at Montreal that pushed the 21st Olympic Games past the halfway point.

Fifty gold medals were awarded in the two days of competition, 15 of them to the East Germans, whose total stood at 26 with 104 events completed. The Soviet Union had 23 and the United States 21.

There was still no gold for Canada, which ran its medal total to eight with a silver and three bronzes. Page 14.

Flood Control Aid Up

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government announced today an increase to $60 million from $30.5 million and an extension to 16 from 10 years of an agreement with British Columbia to build dams to control floods along the Fraser River and its tributaries.

The environment department said in a statement that under the flood agreement, dykes have been built along the Fraser at Agassiz, Harrison Mills, Matsqui and dams have been rehabilitated on the Serpentine and Nicomekl rivers.

Dams are underway at three other spots and with the additional budget, it should be possible to build nine others before the agreement ends in 1984.

The newspaper quotes an unnamed force spokesman as saying that the RCMP security and intelligence squad is "seriously investigating" the report, although no concrete developments have come out of the investigation so far.

"We obtained our information through regular channels as well as international news agencies," The Star quotes him as saying.

"But the information we have is too sketchy and not confirmed. It will take several days before we will be able to say anything definite."

The information indicated the terrorists would stop over in Australia, the newspaper says.

In Australia, strict security precautions were in effect today at the country's international airports in Sydney and Melbourne to prevent terrorists from entering the country.

Police in Melbourne have said security has been doubled at airports and officers have been told to treat foreign passengers with suspicion.

The maximum alert was mounted Sunday after reports that Interpol, the international police organization, had learned that a terrorist group of five men and a woman disappeared from Germany about two days ago and was heading for Australia.

The RCMP has officially denied reports they were investigating the possible arrival of terrorists in Montreal.

Palestinian terrorists killed 11 members of the Israeli Olympic delegation in Munich in 1972.

Amid unconfirmed reports that a 14-year-old Romanian gymnastics gold medalist Nadia Comaneci has received threats against her life, Games security officials have provided protection for a number of top athletes including the Romanian gymnast.

The report came in the wake of a spate of rumors that Arab terrorists were in Montreal and the discovery Friday that a friend of Canadian sprinter Robert Martin had been living in the Olympic Village without accreditation.

This has lead observers to question the supposedly impregnable ring manned by 16,000 police and armed forces personnel who guard the Village and competition sites.

An RCMP spokesman told a reporter that a terrorist suicide assault on the Village would have "less than a 50 per cent chance of success."

MONTREAL (CP) — The RCMP is taking seriously Australian-based reports that international terrorists are on their way to disrupt the Olympic Games here, according to the Toronto Star.

SCALPERS REAP HUGE PROFITS

MONTREAL (CP) — Police have set up a 21-man squad to curb the growing number of scalpers selling Olympic tickets at exorbitant prices.

"The situation will get worse because the finals of many competitions are approaching and people are screaming for tickets," a police spokesman said. "Americans don't mind paying up to $200 for a ticket."

Of the more than 100 scalpers who work around the Olympic stadium, about 50 are considered to be professionals who earn a living following major events around the world where they can sell tickets for a profit, he said.

"One of the pros is reported to have made $25,000 on the opening day. Others are believed to be making around $5,000 a day," said the policeman.

Working in plainclothes 12 hours a day, the squad is helped by the rest of the security staff who radio in the different locations of the scalpers.

"We weren't prepared for all these scalpers. We figured there would be some scalping but not on such a large scale," said the policeman.

Closing day ceremony tickets are reportedly going for $500 today, said the policeman.

Grenoble Kidnapping

GRENOBLE, France (AP) — A 21-year-old Grenoble woman was kidnapped during the weekend — the third young resident of the area seized this summer by an abductor or abductors calling themselves the "Red Brigades."

In each case, letters demanding heavy ransom were signed by the "Red Brigades," but authorities believe all the kidnappings were committed by one man described as an arrogant and dangerous paranoiac.

The latest kidnap victim, Olga Moisenko, was grabbed from her fiance's automobile shortly after midnight Friday night.

During the weekend, a series of letters turned up, all signed by the "Red Brigades." The letters demanded $150,000 ransom plus $8-million worth of merchandise to be distributed to Grenoble's poor by the city's biggest stores.

the weather

Maximum temperatures as high as 35 degrees were recorded in the southern interior or Sunday as southern B.C. enjoyed sunny weather. The north central and coastal regions however experienced cloud and showers with thunderstorms in the central interior. The clouds and precipitation were associated with a weakening disturbance which crossed the north coast yesterday and reached the south coast overnight. Winds rose to gale force in the Juan de Fuca Strait in advance of the disturbance. Clouds and a few showers accompanied this disturbance as it crossed the southern portions of the province this morning. Sunshine will return in the wake of the disturbance as a ridge of high pressure builds along the coast.

Queen Arrives Home From Olympic Games

TEAMSTERS APPEAL AIB WAGE CUT

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth returned to Britain today from the Olympic Games in Montreal.

With her when she landed at London's Heathrow airport aboard a Canadian Forces Boeing 707 jetliner were her younger sons, Prince Andrew and Prince Edward.

Prince Philip is staying on at the Games as president of the International Equestrian Federation. Buckingham Palace said he is to return to Britain Aug. 2.

The royal couple's daughter, Princess Anne, a member of the British Olympic equestrian team, and her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, were to return home with the rest of the British equestrian team Aug. 3.

The Queen spent more than three hours Sunday at the final day of the three-day equestrian event which saw Princess Anne give an almost flawless performance in her jumping before the appreciative crowd.

Earlier in the day, the Queen attended a church service at the 150-year-old St. John's Anglican church in Bromont with Prince Andrew, Prince Charles and Prince Edward.

Later, the Queen and her sons visited the Bromont Olympic Village and the apartment where Princess Anne has been staying.

Before going their separate ways, the whole family posed for photographers on a lawn at the private home where Prince Philip has been staying.

The Queen and Prince Philip began the royal tour July 6 with a six-day state visit to nine U.S. cities marking the nation's bicentennial.

As the dispute between Nairobi and Kampala worsened, Kenya urged its citizens in Uganda — believed to still number several thousand — to flee for their lives "and not wait to be butchered by Uganda troops."

The Kenyan foreign minister said no more Mombasa gas and oil will be delivered to Uganda until Amin pays what he owes, and all future deliveries must be paid for in cash.

Terrorist Report Probed

Continued from Page 1 that a perfect system exists," said Cpl. Pierre Olivier of the RCMP Games security force, which is most directly involved in anti-terrorist work. "All we can try to do is make our system as foolproof as possible."

On another front, flareups continued between Games security forces and reporters, some of whom complain that their work is hampered by excessively tight security measures.

Karl Friedrich Brauns, a West German radio reporter, was arrested and charged with assault Sunday following a confrontation with police at the site of fencing competitions.

Meanwhile, political problems surfaced Saturday when a group of 200 Ukrainian demonstrators burned a Soviet flag flying at the main stadium. Police called in to control the demonstration made no arrests.

The action was the latest in a series of protests aimed at backing up demands that Ukrainian athletes be allowed to compete as members of a separate team.

Spokesmen for the immigration department said today they have no reports of any requests for political asylum from athletes competing at the Olympics.

The statements came in response to unconfirmed broadcast reports that Soviet team members had defected to Canada or had been kidnapped. The report was prompted by Borzov's failure to appear for the 200-metre preliminary heat Sunday.

Mikhail Efimov, press attaché for the Soviet Olympic team, said Sunday night that Borzov, winner of the gold medal for the 100-metre sprint in the 1972 Games, had not appeared because he had aggravated an injury in the 100-metre final Saturday.

Borzov was in the 100-metre sprint Saturday.

A Montreal police spokesman said Borzov was in good hands Sunday night but added that his source refused to say where Borzov was, probably at the request of the Russian Edward.

Efimov said Borzov would compete in a relay event Friday.

FULL FERRY DESPITE RATE HIKE

The Kelsey Bay-to-Prince Rupert ferry run is booked solid until the end of August, despite the fare increase from $90 to $150 B.C. Ferries officials say.

The $150 cost covers a one-way trip for a car, driver and one passenger.

A ferries spokesman said there were some cancellations after the June 1 fare increase, but not an exceptional number and the run is maintaining its passenger loads.

1 OUT OF EVERY 2 CANADIAN ADULTS ARE OVERWEIGHT

It's a fact. More people are eating or drinking so many calories that they weigh more than their desirable weight. However, good nutrition consists of eating a variety of foods in order to provide the many nutrients we all need — but not over-indulging. Following a sensible, wholesome diet is essential. To help you lose the excess bulk quickly, Naran has formulated a special weight control regimen.

The whole plan is included in every pack. An exclusive liquid formulation, a vitamin supplement, and a comprehensive low calorie weekly food menu. Follow label directions and take as needed. Naran is a simple, easy regimen that can help you lose excess bulk quickly before you start on your diet. If you weight control diet is not completely satisfied with your first purchase, just return the empty carton for your money back.

Fiji Naval Vessel Here for First Time

For the first time in history, a naval vessel of the South Pacific island of Fiji will visit Esquimalt.

The minesweeper HMFS Kikau, under the command of Cmdr. Stanley Brown, will enter the harbor at 11 a.m. Tuesday.

Aboard will be 29 officers and men, as well as two Fijian soldiers.

The Kikau, named for a honey-eating bird native to Fiji, represents one-third of the island's navy.

Rounding out the Royal Fijian Military Forces Naval Squadron are her two sister ships, HMFS Kula and HMFS Kiro.

All three ships were formerly part of the United States' navy, then being called the Woodpecker, Vireo and Warbler.

A Montreal police spokesman said Borzov was in good hands Sunday night but added that his source refused to say where Borzov was, probably at the request of the Russian Edward.

'TOTAL CONFUSION' ON QE2

LONDON (AP) — Angry passengers disembarked Sunday from the fire-damaged ocean liner Queen Elizabeth 2, complaining about "total confusion" on board the Cunard Steamship Co. ship.

About 900 of the 1,200 passengers who were aboard the British liner when fire started in the engine room at dawn Friday were to fly on to New York by plane. Nearly 800 of the passengers are American. Canadians also were aboard.

Some travellers said a few persons had refused to leave the ship until they received better offers of compensation from the company. Cunard denied that report. Others said a number of passengers had formed a group to take legal action against Cunard.

The majority of the passengers, however, indicated they were satisfied with Cunard's offer of a 20-per-cent reduction on a future passage on the liner.

Cunard's managing director, John Mitchell, told a news conference on board ship Sunday that police have ruled out "any suggestion of sabotage" in the fire.

The fire broke out in the starboard engine room and burned for 20 minutes, buckling and blackening the ship's funnel. An engine-room mechanic suffered severe burns.

Detectives boarded the ship at Southampton to investigate the blaze. The liner had been the subject of a thorough search by troops and police only last November, when it was suspected of smuggling arms and explosives to the outlawed Irish Republican Army in Northern Ireland.

Cunard officials said first indications were that the fire may have been due to a break in a mechanical coupling, causing lubricating oil to catch fire. The damage was expected to be repaired in time for the liner's next scheduled crossing to New York on Aug. 3, they said.

"Nobody told us anything when the fire broke out," said Norman Barr of Montreal. "We were just left in our beds as the room filled with smoke. Men were running up and down in the corridors with fire extinguishers and we didn't know whether to put our life jackets on or not."

Col. Don Grainger said they also face expulsion from the St. Kilda Mandeville organization which controls sport for the handicapped.

In Toronto Dr. Robert Jackson, chairman of the organizing committee for the Games, said the decision to bar Rhodesian competitors must have been made by the Canadian government.

"As far as we're concerned they'd be welcome to compete in the wheelchair competition because they are members," Jackson said.

Both countries are run by white-minority governments. Rhodesia has been engaged in a growing battle with black nationalists trying to unseat the whites. South Africa has the same problem in South-West Africa (Namibia), which it controls, and also has faced riots in black townships in South Africa.

It said some legislators, including Des Frost, chairman of the ruling Rhodesian Front party, attended a meeting in Salisbury last Tuesday "in order to plan for removing the prime minister from office" and to bring about "drastic changes" in the government.

Legislator Andre Holland confirmed Sunday that 20 government colleagues attended a cocktail party at his farm near Salisbury on Tuesday.

Thirty Whales Beached

MIAMI (UPI) — Thirty whales beached themselves on lonely Loggerhead Key in the Dry Tortugas Sunday in the third such incident involving Gulf of Mexico sea mammals within two weeks.

The five coast guardsmen who are the island's only inhabitants were using a portable pump to spray water on the animals in an attempt to keep them alive until help could arrive.

Coast guard spokesman Steve Frazier in Miami said it was believed the animals were pilot whales.

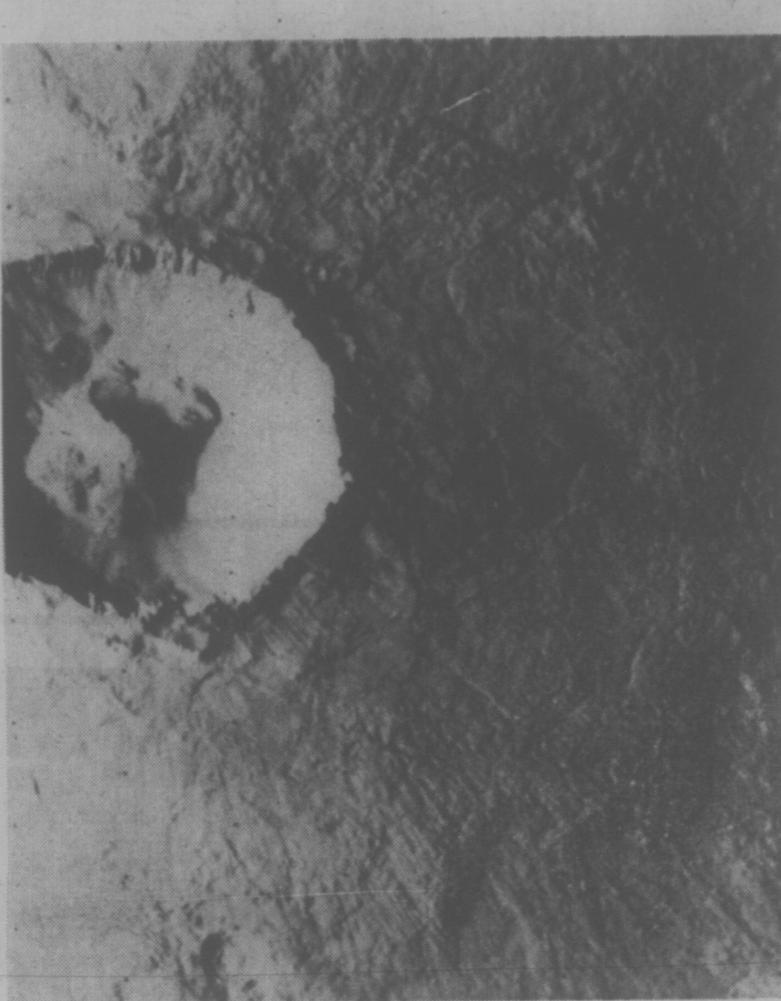

Last Thursday 25 false killer whales attempted to beach themselves near Fort Myers. The previous week 25 spinner dolphins beached themselves near Sarasota.

University of Miami veterinarian Dr. Daniel O'Dell, who performed autopsies on one of the Fort Myers whales and several of the Sarasota dolphins, found that the stomachs of the animals were empty and all were afflicted with a type of parasite.

O'Dell was attempting to get permission from the national marine fisheries service to see what could be done about the whales.

Frazier said the whales ranged up to 15 feet in length and were from 500 to 1,500 pounds. They were resting on a sand bar about six feet above the water.

Frazier said the coast guardsmen manning a light station on the island, near Fort Jefferson national monument, spotted the whales about 4:30 p.m. Sunday.

There's Little Change To Weather on Mars

By THOMAS O'TOOLE
Washington Post

PASADENA, Calif. — The weather on Mars has turned out to be not nearly as changeable as meteorologists expected, producing fewer shifts in two days than most regions of the earth experience in the same time.

During each of the first two days that the Viking space-craft has observed the weather on the Martian surface, the red planet's temperatures, wind speeds, and shifts in wind direction have been almost identical — temperatures varied less than three degrees, and winds less than five miles an hour. Winds changed direction at identical times each day.

"These curves are so much alike," said the University of Miami's Dr. Seymour Hess in explaining the weather charts for Viking's first two days on the surface of Mars, "that if one of them were the Dow Jones averages and the other my predictions for stock prices I'd be a very wealthy man."

The only curious change was that it was a little colder the second day, even though the winds were weaker. The high temperature the second day was 24 degrees below zero, about 3 p.m. in the 24-hour-long Martian day, the low was 123 degrees below zero just after daybreak.

Both readings for Wednesday were two to three degrees colder than Tuesday's, but winds on Wednesday averaged 19 m.p.h. and on Tuesday, 22 m.p.h. Gusts ran as high as 40 m.p.h. both days.

"There's not not that much difference between the two days," Dr. Hess said at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here. "But I have no explanation for its being colder on Wednesday."

Prevailing daytime winds during both days were from the east, changing abruptly to the southwest around midnight. There were two changes in wind direction in the day time and as many as six shifts in wind direction at night.

Winds were most gentle just before what Hess called the "midnight calm," when the wind was changing direction "again like any sensible wind is supposed to do." Hess speculated there were more wind shifts during the next because the Viking spacecraft rests near the bottom of a basin where the colder night air moves down from the higher reaches of the basin.

"The surface cools, it chills the air next to it, and the cold air slides down-slope," Hess said. "The shifts in wind direction come from the basin sloshing the air back and forth, just as the Los Angeles basin moves the smog back and forth."

Barometric pressures were remarkable for their steadiness, never varying from 7.70 millibars either day. Barometric pressure on the Earth fluctuates day to day, averaging 1,100 millibars, meaning the Earth's atmosphere is more than a hundred times thicker than the thin Martian air.

Photographs of the Martian surface from orbit reveal wind streaks from the edges of craters as long as 60 miles.

"We do not expect this uniformity and repetitiveness to continue," the chief Viking weather expert said. "Mars is just too much of a different place to have the same weather every day."

Punishment to Fit the Crime

The federal Law Reform Commission, whose work lately seems founded on basic common sense, continues to suggest changes in the law which appear to the layman to be eminently sensible. Its latest suggestion comes in a working paper released this week which proposes that lawbreakers pay their victims damages.

The commission says that government compensation, now fairly common in Canada, should only be used if restitution is impossible, where the offender cannot pay or repair the mess he made or cannot be found.

The paper says that restitution could take the form of cash, a personal apology or physical labor aimed at restoring the victim's "financial, physical or psychological loss."

While the general idea seems a good one, we wonder how it could be applied to remedy the last-named category. Restitution would work best in crimes involving property, the multitude of incidents of petty vandalism. Make the punks who snap off trees newly planted along city streets engage in a few days reforestation work. Kids who try — and very often succeed — to burn down their schools could perform some labor in reconstruction. Those convicted of burglary should have to replace what they stole.

In these examples, the offender would at the very least learn a basic fact of cause and effect, that he is responsible for his actions. An offence under the law should not bring a fine which Dad will pay, or a tap on the wrist (which is what probation is in many instances). What's wrong about forcing someone to face up to his misdeeds? The embarrassment, shame and guilt associated with such an action might work to his reform, contrary to what some modern psychologists hold.

But we cannot see the application of the Law Reform Commission's theories in more serious crimes. Take murder for an example. How do you set a monetary value on someone's life? His net worth? Or his expected lifetime earnings? What if the victim was a young teenager? What's his or her value to the parents? The answers to such questions are incalculable.

As a step towards making the punishment better fit the crime, however, this suggestion of the Law Reform Commission deserves better treatment than much of its work has received in the past from the federal government, that is, mere polite acknowledgement.

What Price Perfection?

In every Olympics there is some performance by an individual athlete so outstanding, so amazing, that it almost makes the whole expensive, bloodiedminded exercise worthwhile.

Jesse Owens did it in 1936, a black American showing up Hitler's mad racial theories by winning four gold medals in the 100 metres, 200 metres, 400 metre relay and the long jump.

There was the incredible long jump of his countryman, Bob Beamon, at the Mexico City games eight years ago — 29 feet 2 1/4 inches, almost three feet farther than anyone else had jumped before or since. It's considered to be the absolute outside limit of the event, beyond which muscles and bones would tear.

In the Montreal games, fat and bloated as they are with graft and unpaid construction bills, bedeviled with politics, everyone has been captivated by a tiny Romanian girl, Nadia Comaneci. The 14-year-old gymnast is so good the judges declare her performances perfect — seven times in the games, for a total of five medals, three of them gold. But then, she's no stranger to perfection. Eighteen times before in competition the judges have awarded her the unheard-of perfect score of 10.

The Olympics may have cost Canada $1.5 billion, but what price perfection?

India and U.S. N-Policy

WASHINGTON — Recent hearings by the Nuclear Regulatory Agency of the U.S. on the export of enriched uranium to India raised disturbing questions about American policy in this potentially lethal game.

But the fact that two days of public hearings were held (the first ever) served a useful purpose in providing public information and public debate.

The U.S. state department turned in a virtuous performance combining masterful obfuscation with elliptical rationale in its efforts to support the sale of nuclear fuel to the country which had already produced the bomb with the aid of Canadian and American technology and materials.

Even the fact that India has nearly completed new facilities which will enable it to make more ingredients for nuclear weapons failed to deter the state department from its narrow view that this particular export would not affect India's bomb-making potential.

The thrust of the state department's argument appeared more to constitute attempted justification for past agreements with India on nuclear safeguards and to deny that these agreements had been violated than to ensure that India would not do it again.

If the diplomats want to feel safe in the language of their agreements with India, the rest of us can take no consolation from the facts.

Could Do It Again

These are, as is well known, that India produced its nuclear explosion by means of the Canadian Cirrus reactor and possibly with the use of American fuel, and that India could easily do it again.

Yet the state department focused almost entirely on the narrow issue of whether a new shipment of fuel to a particular power station (Tarapur) was adequately safeguarded.

Oh, the department did raise some general questions. For instance, it insisted that it was no use trying to "coerce" India into compliance with the international non-proliferation treaty, which it won't sign; and that if it were to sign, which is unlikely, it would be because the U.S. had very kindly continued to supply nuclear assistance.

"The credibility of the U.S. as a reliable supplier of nuclear materials, equipment and services is an essential element in achievement of our non-proliferation objectives," the department said.

Of course, the credibility of India, which exploded a nuclear bomb in the Rajasthan desert in 1974, wasn't taken into account at all. Not to mention the fact that internal conflict has rendered the country into a mere figment of democracy.

Denial of this particular shipment of 12,261 kilograms of uranium hexafluoride, "would cause a major setback in our rea-tions with India," the state department said. So, it was all right that India got the bomb and that Mrs. Gandhi imposed a police state?

Perhaps the state department is quite correct in assuming that the fuel destined for Tarapur would never be used to make plutonium for a bomb. After all, the reason for this, according to the state department, is that India already has accumulated "large, unsafeguarded sources of plutonium."

Of course, the blame for this, as implied by the state department, is the termination of Canada's nuclear assistance program, thus freeing India from international safeguards attached to that program.

One of the questions raised repeatedly during the hearings of the NRC was the capability of the U.S. to insist that India's "serious financial penalties" and of "capricious" and "irresponsible" delays causing "incalculable damage to the credibility of the U.S."

The motivation and loyalty of commercial companies, however, can be seriously questioned in the light of correspondence between the U.S. government and Vito International of New York, one of the firms involved in 1968 in the design of an Indian nuclear reprocessing plant near Bombay. The company told the U.S. that it could not provide information on the plant because it had been forbidden to do so by the Indian government.

It is also interesting that President Gerald Ford is currently trying to get the U.S. congress to pass legislation giving private industry a much bigger hand in the production of nuclear fuels.

One of the major impressions to emerge from the NRC's hearing is that U.S. policy on nuclear proliferation is confused and confusing.

Even though the hearings were a show-case and, conceivably, could result in the refusal of a licence to export one particular shipment of enriched uranium to India, the NRC, without a blush, had already granted the Edlow firm an export licence on July 2, just a few days before its hearings, to send 9,165 kilograms of uranium hexafluoride to the Tarapur plant in India, enough to keep it going pending consideration of the second, contested, shipment.

At Chalk River

Fortunately, Democrat Jimmy Carter, whose prospects for becoming president after the November election are excellent, has exhibited a strong interest in tackling nuclear proliferation.

In a speech at the United Nations in May, Carter warned that by 1990 the developing nations alone will be capable of producing enough plutonium to make 3,000 Hiroshima-size bombs a year.

He called for a comprehensive treaty banning nuclear testing for any purposes and a worldwide moratorium on the purchase or sale of nuclear reprocessing plants, at least until inadequate international safeguards and standards are improved.

Carter said a lot more, including the bold assertion that "the hour is too late for business as usual, for politics as usual for diplomacy as usual. An alliance for survival is needed."

A lot happens to a candidate and his promises between a campaign and taking office, so it remains to be seen whether Carter, if elected, will straighten out U.S. policy on nuclear proliferation.

But perhaps he will recall his personal experience as a nuclear engineer, which included, he says, helping to disassemble a damaged nuclear reactor core at Chalk River, Ont. something which alerted him to the dangers of messing with nuclear power. India, however, alerted the world.

INDIA'S NUCLEAR PLANT
... Canada built it spent fuel stockpiles, material already used for power purposes, should be returned to the U.S. for reprocessing rather than allowed to pile up in India.

In fact, it turns out, the U.S. has consistently refused to take back this fuel. This, of course, can be calculated only to encourage the Indians to build their own reprocessing facilities, which they have done.

There is, in addition to this convoluted U.S. government policy, an underlying pressure from commercial interests to continue nuclear fuel exports. Such pressure was a major factor in Canada, although it was the government that was the promoter of nuclear trade there.

The company which would actually export the fuel to India, Edlow International, warned in a letter to the NRC that it faces

... the gold ... the silver ... and the bronze ...

100 in Solitary

Re Mr. Wixson's letter (Another Irishman) of July 20: I would like to put him straight on a few things. There are 100 Irish prisoners in England, in solitary, no heat, no clothes and one grey blanket. Father Fell got 12 years, while saying mass, because guns etc. were found in a building behind the church. Frank Stagg robbed a bank (and died on a hunger strike in England). So did the Littlejohns in Dublin, but being intelligence officers their escape from Dublin prison was engineered by the SAS.

The greatest crime in England today is to be Irish. Ireland is one of the last British colonies, and for 900 years they have been persecuted, starved, taxed and murdered. The war is following the rules of "General Kitson." The country is full of intelligence officers, American, British, Irish, others and of course the Provs. Security is tight. Some of the lads got 12 months for running around with a flag and a tent in their car.

The government of Eire had laid charges in Strasbourg Court for torturing of prisoners by the British government. Two thousand men were dragged from their beds at 4 a.m. and interned in the Long Kesh hell hole. They were tortured, some were murdered, some hung themselves, no charges, no trials. England will never occupy Eire by consent or force — no idle words but spoken by an angel to St. Patrick in County Mayo, Eire. — Anne V. Sherbrook, 1919 Davie Street.

One of the reasons is the quality and dedication of the people who work in this service. The writer seemed to be poking fun at them, too, but every comment he quoted was the comment of an individual trying to help the passenger to have as pleasant a ride as possible.

"It is easy to criticize and to ridicule things in our society, as your writer has done. It is much harder to build and preserve a community service, as the workers in the passenger service do every day. Their difficulties are compounded by economic changes which have resulted in the cost of that service far exceeding the revenues supplied by the passengers.

"A Rail-Liner is intended to serve most, if not all, points on a line. Like a bus, it makes many stops to meet local needs. It should not be surprising that such service takes longer than one which makes fewer stops.

"I don't believe the train (the Canadian) stopped that often or that track conditions were as bad as the story implied. There are four scheduled stops between Winnipeg and Thunder Bay. If he travelled in May, as I would surmise, there may have been some unscheduled stops or some slow travel because of work being done on the tracks or roadbed. A certain amount of this is inevitable. Work must be done to maintain our main line in good condition.

"The suggestion that the train would be stopped for a youth to photograph to get off and camp whenever and wherever she wanted is plainly false.

"The implication that section work crews use this transcontinental train to ride to and from work is equally false. They, too, are bound to board or leave the train only at designated stops except in good condition.

"The statement that the Kenora station

"is given over entirely to freight" is not true. It is still used for passenger service.

"These are just a few samples of the inaccuracies and errors that characterized the article.

"There is no question at all that railway passenger service today is not what it used to be.

"The recreation area at Esquimalt offers ten swims for $4 in the largest pool I have seen, and there are plenty of splendid free concerts. Life here is heaven!

"I came here to take a course in biofeedback (mental healing) at the university and feel confident that when this system of self-healing without medicine or pills is accepted and practised, there will be no need for any other form of cure.

"If you old people agree with me, write Bill Bennett or Dave Barrett (as your fancy decrees) and ask him to help biofeedback. They are both fine men, and I know will be anxious to help. — May Robinson, 3-1122 Collinson Street.

CPR says Manitoba passenger service isn't that bad.

CPR Replies

I noted with interest your reprint on June 24 of the Winnipeg Free Press article "Ticket on a Tatty Train" by Ted Allan.

Following the initial article, a letter to the editor from J. W. Malcolm, Prairie region vice-president of CP Rail, regarding the article, appeared in the paper.

It said in part: "The article was full of inaccuracies, misinformation and confusion."

"The writer seemed to be totally unaware that the Canadian and the Rail-Liner serve quite different purposes. There have even seemed to be difficulty in distinguishing between the two railway companies.

"A Rail-Liner is intended to serve most, if not all, points on a line. Like a bus, it makes many stops to meet local needs. It should not be surprising that such service takes longer than one which makes fewer stops.

"The losses are partly subsidized. The service is retained as a matter of public policy. The railway covers part of the loss, and does its best to hold those losses to a minimum. In view of all the difficulties, it is saddening to face the kind of uninformed and misleading account you have published. — J. W. Malcolm, Vice-President, Prairie Region, CP Rail, Winnipeg." — R. A. Ferguson, Regional Manager, Public Relations and Advertising, CP Rail, Vancouver.

Think About It

Last Sunday as my husband and I were visiting one of the local tourist attractions, we came in conversation with a couple from California. We were disappointed to hear what they had come up against at one of the souvenir shops downtown. They said they had picked up gifts to the value of approximately $50, and asked if they could have some boxes for the china. The salesgirl asked the manager and came back with the answer that they would have to charge 35 cents for each box. The tourists left and shopped elsewhere, where they got equal merchandise boxed without the extra fee. Some of these stores had better think about this one, if they want to keep the tourist trade.

Being fairly new to Victoria, I would like to add that I think Beacon Hill Park is one of the nicest parks we have come across, but have never seen anything like the ladies' unclean washrooms! I think it should be cleaned up and kept up, as it detracts from otherwise lovely visits to the park. — Gloria E. Campbell, 895 Swan Street.

'The National Treasure' Out to Make a Bundle

By CHARLES FOLEY

SAN CLEMENTE — Americans will not be hearing from one, at least, of the key figures in this year's noisy presidential election. At his home overlooking the Pacific in placid San Clemente, Richard M. Nixon — difficult as it must be for a man who believes he has so much to offer the nation — is talking only to his tape-recorder until the race is over.

After that, the deluge: Nixon has much on his mind, and he means to tell it all, through memoirs, articles, television series. David Frost, America's favorite transatlantic media impresario, will begin taping a six-hour TV interview with Nixon as soon as the presidential votes are counted November 2. It will be seen around the world. The memoirs should be with the publisher, Warner Books, early next year; already the New York Times has purchased pre-publication serialization and world syndication rights.

Worries Ford

But for now, Nixon's shadow continues to cast a chill over the hopes of both Republican contestants vying for occupancy of the White House. He cannot be kept out of the election, now that the primaries are over. For Gerald Ford is a major concern: he brings back Watergate, the pardon, and Ford's long loyalty to the man who put him in office. To Ronald Reagan, he is only slightly less of an irritant. Reagan frequently reminds voters that his rival was "appointed by Richard Nixon," and assures them that the disgraced ex-President would have "no place in my administration." But Reagan, although untried by the Watergate brush, also supported Nixon to the last and cannot afford to stir too many public memories.

San Clemente's most famous resident, for his part, remains an invisible presence. After last February's dramatic return to the limelight with his visit to China, Nixon went to ground. The citizens of this wealthy retirement haven discreetly ignore him. No heads turn when he appears, as he does at least once a week, to play a round at the exclusive Shorecliffe Golf Club.

Even though his long-suffering wife, Pat, has had a stroke and he has been discharged as a lawyer in New York State, looking cheerful and well-tanned, he dines out very occasionally at his favorite Mexican restaurant, El Adobe, or visits such neighbors as the Walter Annenbergs or the James Roosevelts (Annenberg was the Nixon-appointed Ambassador to Britain; Roosevelt served as California chairman of "Democrats for Nixon" in 1972.)

Such outings apart, the only physical signs of Nixon's presence in Southern California are a plaque on the wall of the Old Mission at San Juan Capistrano, commemorating a presidential visit, and the "Little Bit of History" museum at a local hotel run by Nixon admirer Paul Presley. Near 30,000 tourists have examined this collection of Nixonian memorabilia — gifts from Peking and so forth — since Presley put it on show six months ago. The ex-president still has a large following in Southern California, his homeland, and the guest book is full of sentimental acclaim. "Mr. Nixon," someone has written, "you are a national treasure."

book. Frost is also planning to turn the interview sound track into record albums, to be marketed, one supposes, as The Nixon Tapes.

By now almost everyone who was anyone in Watergate has written a book about the scandal, yet America's appetite seems far from sated. All The President's Men, the movie based on the Woodward and Bernstein book is pulling in big crowds, while at the top of all the best-seller lists for weeks past has been The Final Days, their horrific account of the decline and fall of the Nixon presidency.

Other Watergate figures doing their best to cash in on the boom include:

H. R. Haldeman, former White House chief of staff. He has just pulled off a journalistic coup of sorts with a series under his own byline in newspapers across the country. It is largely a defense of himself and his old boss, who, Haldeman speculates, may have been a victim of Central Intelligence Agency intriguing. The CIA had the capacity and perhaps the motivation. Haldeman thinks: Nixon was trying to revamp the CIA and bring it more under White House control, and some within the agency did not like that one bit. Haldeman also suggests that Alexander Butterfield, the aide who revealed the existence of the White House tapes, may have been a CIA man.

The Richard Nixon show, budgeted at $3 million (it will include newsreel footage and interviews with others) is to be taped immediately after the November elections at Nixon's request. It will air in February or March, by which time the ex-president will have completed the first draft of his book. Frost is also planning to turn the interview sound track into record albums, to be marketed, one supposes, as The Nixon Tapes.

John Dean, former White House legal counsel. His book, Blind Ambition, is complete and will be published later this year. "A blunt, honest look at Mr. Nixon and his men" is Dean's description of it. His wife Maureen has already published her Watergate book.

Dean is also going to cover the August Republican convention for Rolling Stone magazine.

John Ehrlichman, President Nixon's former domestic affairs adviser. He published a thinly-disguised account of the Nixon presidency as a novel, The Company, in June. It was torn to shreds by some critics, but Ehrlichman is already at work on a second. His efforts may be interrupted by a jail term. He faces a possible eight-year stretch for his role in the Watergate cover-up, but is appealing against his conviction.

Charles Colson, another White House counsel, has written a successful (250,000 copies sold) account of his Washington years and recent conversion to Christianity, called Born Again. He is in Europe — with family — to promote the book.

Jeb Magruder, a director of Nixon's 1972 campaign, and his wife both have Watergate books out. Magruder, too, has "got religion": he is a leading light in an organization called the "Young Life Campaign".

Watergate, clearly, has its profitable side. Nixon alone stands to make several million dollars out of it. The Internal Revenue Service hopes he will use some of the loot to pay off the $146,000 he still owes in back taxes for 1969.

London Observer

It was a classic case study of the politics of hijacking, in which Israel came to the brink of sacrificing its basic policy of non-negotiation with terrorists. At the outset, it looked as though there was no choice but to give in and release the imprisoned Arab guerrillas the hijackers were demanding from Israel and four other states.

Israel's policy of non-negotiation has never been rigid. In 1968 Israel exchanged a group of imprisoned Arab guerrillas for the passengers and crew of an El Al plane; in 1969 two captured Syrian pilots were exchanged for two Israeli hijack victims jailed in Syria.

There have been other, unpublished, instances when Israel negotiated with hijackers.

Since 1969, however, the government has avoided dealing openly with terrorists whenever possible. If there was an opportunity to fight back, it was exploited. On May 9, 1972, hijackers took over a Sabena airliner en route from Brussels to Israel. When the plane was on Israeli soil, a specially-trained Israeli commando unit broke into the cabin and shot it out, killing the two hijackers and one passenger in the process.

Ironically, just four days before the Air France airbus was hijacked, the nine countries of the European Common Market reached an agreement in Luxembourg on ways to increase security and combat international terrorism. A communiqué called for tighter coordination among the nine and an exchange of security personnel to study organization and tactics.

Without Entebbe, it probably would have produced no more substantial results than the many similar communiqués that have preceded it. But perhaps the Air France hijacking will provide the extra incentive necessary to bring about a fundamental change in the pragmatic politics of hijacking.

The only answer, it seems, is a coordinated, international effort to tighten airline security and prevent would-be hijackers from reaching the planes.

Israel has called for such a campaign, although officials here are skeptical that even the Uganda incident will bring about the necessary change in attitude.

Democrat Jimmy Carter would sweep either President Ford or Republican challenger Ronald Reagan by a margin of more than 40 per cent, according to a Harris poll appearing in today's Washington Post.

The survey, taken shortly after the Democratic national convention in New York, gave Carter a 66 per cent to 27 per cent lead over Ford and was favored over Reagan 68 per cent to 26 per cent.

The Louis Harris organization labelled the poll "one of the most substantial ever recorded," the Post said.

Harris said Carter has made "one of the most rapid ascendencies of a candidate to public popularity in the history of American politics."

The poll was based on interviews with 1,451 persons of voting age.

Harris said that only four out of 10 interviewed who said they would vote for the Democratic nominee said they "feel very strongly" about their choice, meaning that less than 30 per cent of the total electorate can be solidly placed in the Carter column," Harris said.

The poll also found Carter somewhat weaker among voters in the west and weaker with Jewish voters than those of any other religion.

Another survey of most of the 131 uncommitted delegates to next month's Republican national convention in Kansas City shows that most of them have not made up their minds about who they want as their nominee for president.

The two candidates themselves have been putting in some telephone time, calling and calling again, discussing their stands on issues, stressing their version of how electable they are, never themselves quite asking for that ultimate commitment, but pressuring, pressuring, pressuring.

Aides to both Reagan and Ford claim a majority of the Mississippi delegation, but the 30-member bloc voted Sunday to go to Kansas City uncommitted. The convention there begins Aug. 16.

A recent tally shows that state has 25 for Reagan, three for Ford and two uncommitted, but Ford Backers said they were gaining strength there and might have the majority needed to swing the entire delegation to the president under a unit rule.

Ford claims 1,335 delegates, or five more than the number needed, while the Reagan camp said they have 1,140, 10 more than needed. Neither side would publish a list of the delegates they claim.

The counting of delegates varied widely though all accounts show Ford leading Reagan by at least 50 delegates. The Washington Star gave Ford 1,128 to Reagan's 1,064. The New York Times 1,124 to 1,063, and The Washington Post 1,101 to 1,027.

Carter and his running mate, Sen. Walter Mondale, are beginning an in-depth study of the issues on which they will build their campaign, turning their attention first to the U.S. defense posture.

A group of defense experts, including former undersecretary Cyrus Vance and other authorities from government and academic fields, was scheduled to meet with the candidates today to start four days of sessions on various topics.

Tot, Dad Killed in Custody Battle

TISHOMINGO, Okla. (AP) — It was a drama acted out in many times: estranged parents battling for the custody of their children. Steve and Jean Cain were such parents.

Three-year-old Cody was the focus of their tug of war. Now father and son are dead and the mother is in hospital in shock.

Three of the father's friends are charged with second-degree murder and both families are ripped by heartbreak.

And even in death, the feud lives on. Steve's relatives will be barred from Cody's funeral.

As in other custody battles, all legal remedies exhausted, the father had attempted an abduction.

Cain, described by his lawyer as a "very mild-mannered young man," travelled from New Mexico to Tishomingo to get the child, accompanied by three friends he had known throughout his school years.

Their abduction attempt was well-planned: one of the four knocked at Mrs. Cain's door asking to use the phone.

When admittance was gained, Cain was grabbed and the four fled in separate cars.

But they had not reckoned on the hot pursuit by the maternal relatives, and certainly not on the wreck which threw the three-year-old out of the car, slamming him against some rocks in full view of relatives on both sides of the family.

The car carrying Cain and his son hit an embankment and overturned three times after being bumped in the rear by the pickup truck driven by the child's maternal uncle, Clay Martin, witnesses said. No charges were filed immediately against Martin.

Young Cody will be buried in Tishomingo on Tuesday. On the same day, the body of 25-year-old Steve Cain will be sent back to the ranch country around Truth or Consequences, N.M., for burial.

As in most child custody cases, the stories of "why" are contradictory.

Cain's family says he only wanted to give the boy the best life possible, raising him in the family ranching tradition.

SAIL RACE OVER

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — Officials of the solo trans-Atlantic race called the finish Sunday night, but nine entries are still expected to reach port.

The race officially ended at 7:59 Sunday night. Dutch sailor Elco Kasemler made it in just under the wire Sunday. American Robert Lengel arrived early Sunday morning.

Frenchman Eric Tauberty won the race in the Pen Duick VI, finishing in 23 days.

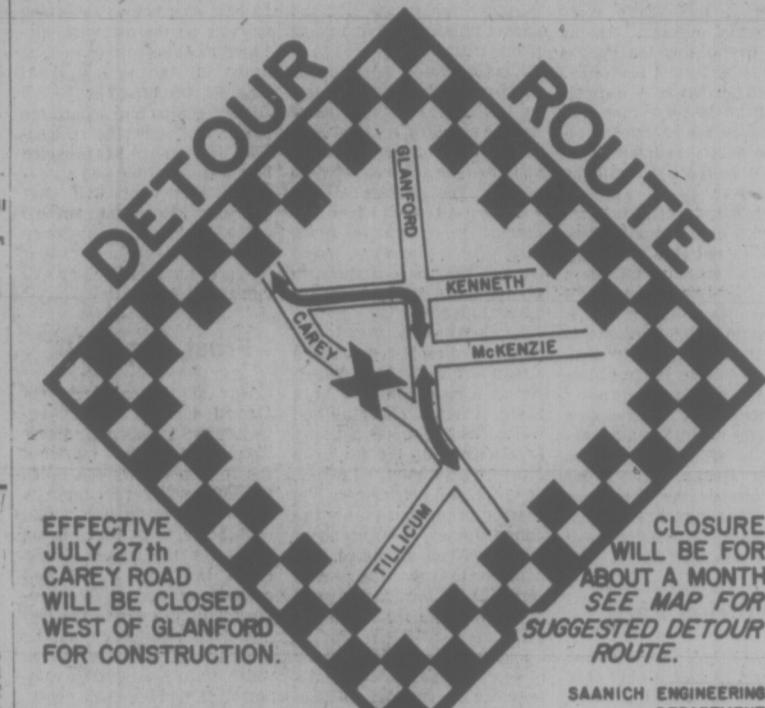

Coast-to-Coast Search For Kidnap Masterminds

SHARP INCREASE IN GUN SMUGGLING

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It said customs agents made 166 arrests of accused weapons smugglers, most of them along the Mexican border with Texas and California.

The memo said customs service agents seized more than 41,000 illegal weapons of various types and more than 312,000 units of explosives in the 12-month fiscal year period.

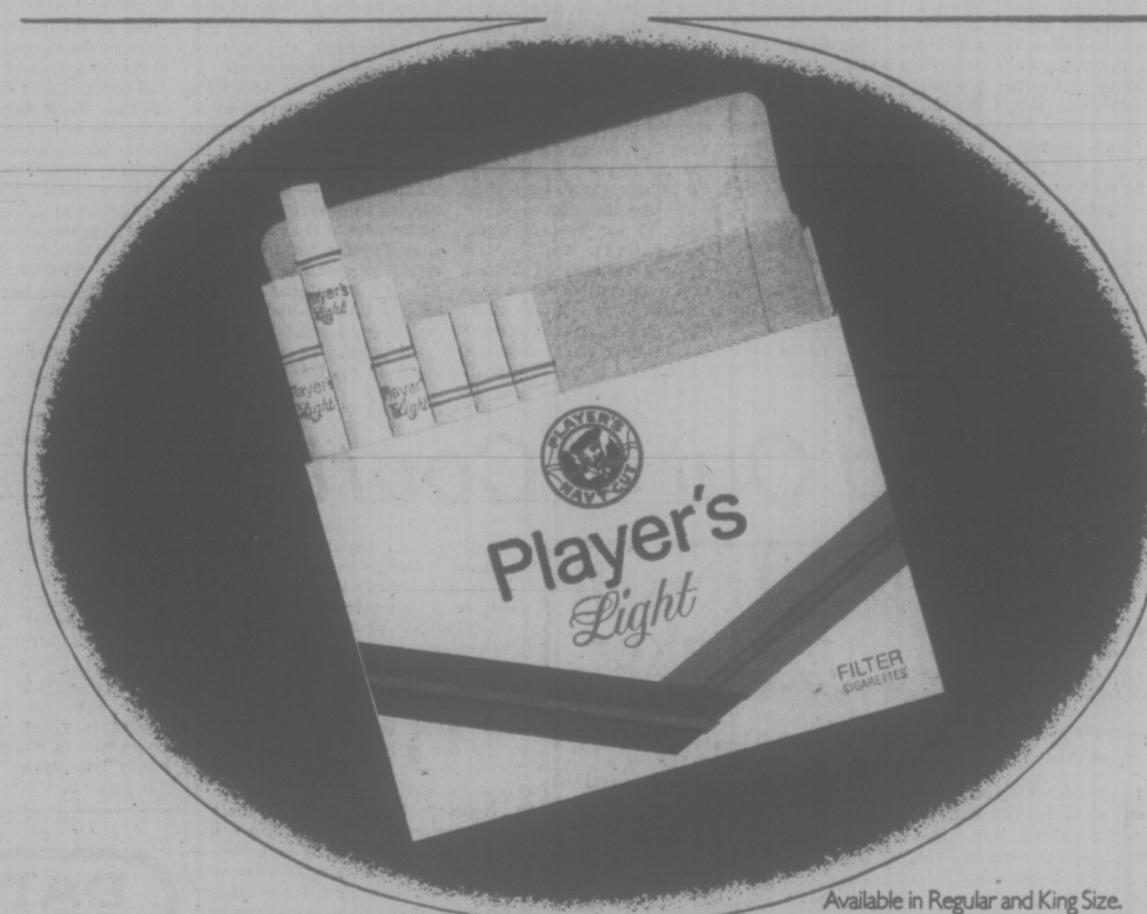

Officials say these arrest and seizure figures are considerably higher than those recorded in previous years and, according to one customs service source, indicate a stunning surge in illegal gun smuggling.

FLAWED COINS WORTH $500

MONTREAL (CP) — A flaw in an undetermined number of $10 pieces produced in the first series of Olympic coins has increased their value to as much as $500 among dealers and collectors.

Austin Page, managing director of the Canadian Olympic Coin Program, confirmed during the weekend that the flawed coins are in circulation.

Coins without the imperfection feature an impression of the Queen on one side and the Montreal skyline on the other.

As a result of production problems, the imperfect coins have a faint impression of the Queen's head on the back side and a similarly faint impression of the skyline of Montreal across the Queen's neck on the front.

"... I think I know how it happened," Mr. Page said.

There are two faces on the die that strikes the coin. In this case the machine must have accidentally been used without any silver in the mould, causing the top and bottom halves to strike each other and make an imprint.

He added that officials of the program don't know how many might have been produced before the dies were changed.

A Starry Trek By 6,000

TORONTO (CP) — More than 6,000 devotees of the Star Trek era took over two convention floors of a downtown hotel during the weekend.

And for many of the adherents of the long-defunct television series on science fiction, the gathering was more than a token success.

"It's the ultimate trip," said Carl Palmer, a free-lance writer from Chicago.

Dick Preston and his wife Janice came from Washington to discuss solar energy at the three-day convention.

"Star Trek opened up our minds to these types of subjects," Preston said.

"We'd like to promote more shows like Star Trek—shows with a high philosophical level."

Marc Gerin-Lajoie of Ottawa said he has attended six Star Trek conventions because "they are a way of meeting a lot of intelligent people."

Book Says Three Hijackers Were Taken Back to Israel

PARIS (AP) — A book being published on Israel's raid into Uganda to rescue hostages of a hijacked plane says three of the hijackers were captured and taken to Israel for questioning, a French magazine carrying excerpts of the book reports.

The Israeli government said after the July 4 mission that all seven of the Palestinian and pro-Palestinian hijackers had been killed. Later, there were unconfirmed reports that there had been as many as 10 hijackers of the Air France jetliner. Israeli commandos rescued more than 100 persons in the raid on Entebbe airport.

Israeli officials have made no comment on the book.

Operation Entebbe by Uri Dan and William Stevenson.

Dan is an editor of the Tel Aviv newspaper Ma'ariv and Stevenson is a British journalist.

The first instalment, carried Sunday by the news magazine Le Point, covers only the events leading up to the movement of the commandos by air to Uganda. The article says several plans were envisaged, including one to kidnap President Idi Amin of Uganda.

Although nothing is said in the body of the magazine's story about three hijackers being returned to Israel, the headline says: "All the Palestinian terrorists were not killed at Entebbe; three of them were taken back alive for questioning."

A whole armory of folklore methods still flourishes in spite of all the publicity given to orthodox contraception, according to Bristol University researcher Audrey Chamberlain, writing in New Society magazine.

Some 81 mothers in northern England were questioned. Most came from working-class backgrounds and all had between six and 13 children. About a quarter believed in some old wives' tale or other.

That makes more sense than all those pills," he insisted.

One, for instance, thought a glass of iced water after intercourse would stop pregnancy. Several believed that worrying about becoming pregnant made the mishap more likely.

QUE. NURSES END FIVE-WEEK STRIKE

MONTREAL (CP) — Faced with back-to-work legislation, members of the Quebec Nurses Federation voted during the weekend to end a five-week strike and return to work at midnight tonight, but promised to continue their contract battle with the province government.

"We will return to our patients—it's there that we will continue our battle," federation president Ginette Goss-

lin told 1,500 nurses meeting at a downtown hotel.

On the recommendation of the union executive, the nurses voted almost unanimously to end the strike that has all but paralysed 29 French-language hospitals, mostly in the Montreal area, since June 18.

Under legislation passed by the national assembly Saturday, nurses who do not return to work face heavy penalties, including an automatic 10-percent reduction of the retroactive pay raise of $2,700 and stiff fines.

On the key issue of job mobility, the nurses lost their bid to stop the government from imposing a new system of transferring personnel from department to department when the need arises.

They also failed to get a shorter work week for those on unpopular evening and night shifts and instead received a $2.28 bonus for each of those shifts worked.

Soviet Satellite Fails

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has suffered its third straight failure this year in testing a satellite-destroying system, U.S. intelligence sources report.

The latest failure occurred July 21 when a Russian Hunter satellite did not stay in orbit, the sources say.

U.S. specialists say the Hunter satellite was sent up to try to destroy Russia's Cosmos 389 satellite, which had been lofted into orbit 12 days earlier.

U.S. analysts say they do not know what is causing the Soviet Union's apparent technical problems.

The Russian effort to develop an operational anti-satellite system dates back about 10 years and has proceeded in fits and starts.

Equipped with five main rocket engines for making oriental adjustments and manoeuvring, the Soviet interceptor is believed capable of closing in on its target to within 100 feet before exploding on radio command from the ground.

Thinking how nice it would be to win $100,000?

Business Output Slow

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Productivity in the business sector of the American economy slowed substantially in the spring quarter, rising only 3.6 per cent, the U.S. government said today.

The labor department said the moderate advance in productivity — output per worker-hour — was less than half the first-quarter rise of 7.5 per cent. Nevertheless, the productivity increase was still a vast improvement over the 1.6 per cent decline registered in the fourth quarter of last year.

The slowdown in productivity came as no surprise following last week's commerce department report on Gross National Product. Productivity usually slows when the over-all rate of output in the economy eases.

Last week's GNP figures showed that the nation's total output of goods and services — stripped of inflation — rose only 4.4 per cent during April, May and June, a considerable drop-off from the first quarter's 9.2 per cent surge.

Bases' Closings Delayed

OTTAWA (CP) — Bowing to pressure from across Canada and from within its own caucus, the Liberal government has postponed potentially contentious decisions on closure or partial closure of military bases.

Defence department sources said last week the cabinet decision breathes life into the First Airborne Regiment of Edmonton, which was due to disappear in the name of greater efficiency.

It is reported that the government may shelve or at least radically modify the whole idea of base closure. The argument is that money saved in closing a base will be spent by the federal government to create new jobs in the base area to reduce unemployment caused by the closure.

Rather than do that, the government may consider making some money from the department of regional economic expansion (DREE) available to the military to continue operating some bases.

The government has been under pressure from everybody from civic and business representatives to MPs since it was disclosed late last year that a forces study could result in base closure.

The study had two objectives: saving money by closing bases unneeded by today's relatively small (73,000) unified Armed Forces and freeing more support personnel for operational roles.

Gen. J. A. Dextraze, chief of defence staff, had hoped to find 1,500 more operational personnel, partly by reducing support troops. He had proposed giving the quick-strike role now carried by the Airborne to the Royal Canadian Regiment of Petawawa, Ont.

The Airborne would disband and facilities on both Calgary and Edmonton military bases would be reduced.

Meanwhile, sources said last week the military recommended partial closure of Summerside, P.E.I., airbase, closure of the army base in London, Ont., and base consolidation and the shifting of troops here and there among other bases.

Joe Power, head of the Union of National Defence Employees representing 28,500 blue and white collar civilian workers in bases, toured Canada seeking to keep pressure on the government.

Gen. Dextraze has said he wants government financial help to keep open any base his forces do not need.

Missouri Dwarf Overcoming Huge Problems

Ernest, 21, second from right, plays ball with his brothers

By JOSEPH WHITAKER
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Ernest K. Ott, of Silver Spring, Mo., dribbled the ball to the left, then to the right. He stopped in midcourt and threw the ball toward the distant basket. It fell short, but somehow Ott seemed satisfied with the effort.

Ott, who is 21 and stands 3 feet, 7 inches tall, does not hesitate to don sneakers, blue jeans and a football jersey to play a rough-and-tumble game of basketball with his six normal-sized brothers in the backyard court of their suburban Maryland home.

"My philosophy is that if you aim for the sky, you're sure to hit the ceiling," said Ott. "I know that I'm a little person. But I believe that — given the chance — I can do almost anything a normal-sized person can."

Recently Ott, the oldest and only short-statured child

among his six brothers and one sister, graduated from the University of Maryland (Baltimore County) with a degree in economics. He has received a scholarship to begin work on a master's degree in business administration at Duke

University this fall.

"I'm not bitter because I happened to be unusually short," said Ott, who conceded he's had to adjust to numerous problems related to his handicap. "I have problems with normal-sized bank counters and restaurants. Public telephones and water fountains are often impossible without something to stand on," he said.

"Buses are a particular problem," Ott added. "I have to literally jump off the ground to reach the first step. Then there is the problem of finding clothes and shoes that fit. — I wear size 12½ 5A (children's size) and nobody makes that size."

750 Fish Stories

Seven hundred and fifty young fishermen and women were after the big one Saturday at the 26th annual Victoria playgrounds fishing derby.

The youngsters lined the Ogden Point breakwater (left) during the three-hour derby, fishing for the big one worth a trophy and transistor radio.

Norman Apro, 7, of 4119 Barrington, Saanich (below), eventually took the prize with a two-pound 12-ounce ratfish.

Fourteen-year-old Dean Schabatowski of 1327 Cubbentree Ave., won the biggest prize, though, when he headed the 10 hidden-weight prize winners with a one-ounce winner. He was awarded a 10-speed bicycle and radio.

Other hidden-weight winners included:

(2) Diana Scott, 11, of 477 Lampson, half-ounce fish, transistor radio; (3) Paula Dibski, 4, 2096 Kendal, two-ounce fish; $15 gift certificate; (4) Danny Matthews, 13, 341 Mann, four-ounce fish, tackle box; (5) Paul Grootendorst, 9, 791 McKenzie, one-ounce fish, fishing rod set; (6) Donny Morgan, 9, 2409 Chambers, half-ounce fish, fishing rod set; (7) Jennifer Roberts, 10, 640 Oliver, one-ounce fish, fishing rod set; (8) Gregg Phillips, 14, 1120 Temple, one-ounce fish, fishing rod set.

Alderman Denies Links With Project Developer

Victoria Ald. Bob Wright today denied charges by a city council colleague, Ald. Ron McKenzie, that he has professional, personal and political links with developer Hans Hartwig, and that he is "bulldozing" Hartwig's plans for a Wharf Street development through council.

Wright was commenting on an article in last Saturday's Victoria Times in which McKenzie alleged that Wright, Hartwig and someone in the provincial government are involved in "political incest" surrounding the project.

In the Times interview, McKenzie questioned why the provincial government suddenly appeared anxious for the developer's plans to proceed without council.

He claimed Wright and Hartwig are friends and also have a business connection, because a company in which the latter has a financial interest leases space from Wright's firm at Oak Bay Marina.

Wright denied, however, he has any special relationship with the developer. He said Hartwig had purchased shares in Oak Bay Marine Sales and Service Ltd, but he (Wright) was not privy to the purchase.

As for the claimed friendship, he said, he doesn't know Hartwig any better than the Times reporter who wrote the original article, and said Hartwig has never visited his home.

"What's a friend? I have thousands of friends in this town."

Wright said if he felt there could have been some conflict of interest, he would have disqualified himself from city council discussion on the matter last week.

He accused McKenzie of "character assassination by innuendo," adding:

"His public utterances in this case are irresponsible. I believe aldermen and all politicians for that matter are under a duty to check things out before making accusations."

In the earlier interview, McKenzie had noted that at last week's council caucus meeting Wright "aggressively" expounded the merits of Hartwig's plans to build a 65-unit residential complex on 1302-1306 Wharf Street.

McKenzie pointed out that the property was covered both by the provincial government's waterfront freeze and by a heritage designation bylaw.

He expressed concern that council was being asked to endorse removal of the protective legislation without having an opportunity to view the developer's plans and before a land-use contract had been drafted.

Wright, however, said he had not asked for any vote. All that happened was that Mayor Mike Young requested a motion from council.

The motion was to authorize Young to ask the Capital Improvement District Commission for the land freeze to be lifted "only after the city got what it wanted in negotiations with the developer."

Wright said McKenzie was well aware that he (Wright) had been instructed to investigate Hartwig's proposals on the basis of the heritage implications involved and the project's impact on the architectural scale of Wharf Street.

"That was basically my involvement," he added.

"In this particular case I had two main interests — a desire that the waterfront in the Inner Harbor be returned to the people of Victoria, and that our heritage be protected."

Answering McKenzie's point on the provincial government's interest in Hartwig's project, Wright said as far as he knows there is no such interest.

And he stressed he has no connection with the government or any individual in it.

McKenzie had implied the developer was being let off scot-free from providing any parking for his development, he said, but if the alderman had done his homework he would know that the harbor commercial zoning category requires no parking for either commercial or residential uses.

Wright said Hartwig's proposal for the area should be judged on its merits.

"If the alderman feels I have a conflict of interest he has the proper legal means to pursue that end, rather than this over-zealousness for publicity," he added.

"In this particular case I

AT BISLEY

BISLEY, England (CP) — The Queen's Prize was won at Bisley Saturday by Walter Magnay of Guildford, Surrey, scoring 287 out of a possible 300. He took the decision in a tie-shoot with Ted Molyneux, another Surrey marksman, and Mrs. Libby Felton, of Victoria West, hoping to keep in the city the Canadian soccer championship won last year by London Boxing Club, is finally getting some action under game conditions.

Coached by Doug Hill, the Wests have been working out regularly three times a week but haven't been involved in competition since they won the Province Cup in May.

Now, however, the Wests are getting tougher training

— thanks to Seattle Sounders of the North American Soccer League.

The pro team's reserves, getting two goals from played coach Jim Gabriel, defeated Wests in an exhibition game at Renton on July 18 and will face the Victoria team again next weekend.

Wests and Sounders reserves are scheduled to meet

Sunday at Royal Athletic

Park, starting at 1:30 p.m.

Wests will meet the winner of the Alberta-Saskatchewan playoff at Royal Athletic Park on Aug. 14. The winner goes on to represent the far west region in the Canadian tournament at Winnipeg.

Five Canadians shot their way into the final. Bob Pitcairn of Delta, B.C., finished 20th with 282; Alan Marion, of Hull, Que., was 41st with 280; Eric Andrews, of Victoria, was 56th with 273; Norman Beckett, of Ancaster, Ont., 69th with 277 and Derek Daines, Calgary, 91st with 272.

There were 1200 entries for the contest this year, reduced to 100 for the final.

Doug Benedict of Burnside was second while Bill McMillan of Nanaimo, who handed Knudsen his only defeat, finished third.

The Vancouver Island women's novice singles and

"Champion of Champions"

tournaments will be held at

Burnside Thursday and Friday.

Chris Knudsen of Victoria

Lawn Bowling Club, participated in his first inter-club competition, captured the Vancouver Island novice singles championship Saturday.

An avid curler who moved to Victoria from Manitoba two years' ago, Knudsen bounced back from an opening-game

set back to score five straight victories and top six other rivals in the double-elimination competition at Oak Bay.

Bobby Orr and Pals Ponder Golf Shot at Uplands

Gare's Gang Wins

Teams captained by Danny Gare of Buffalo Sabres and Bobby Schmautz of the Boston Bruins captured top honors in the B.C. Heart Foundation's Celebrity golf tournament Sunday at Uplands.

Gare's squad, which included Marty Smith, Dave Jones and Gordie Johnston, won the handicap prize with a net 48, a whopping 22 under par, for the best-ball event.

They finished four strokes ahead of player representative Bill Wattens team (Wally Robertson, Ken Little and Mel McCullough). Denis Ververgaert of Vancouver Canucks, Hugh Reid, Bob Moss and Ken Kenyin were third.

Schmautz and Uplands members Bill Garner, Gordie Hunter and Cec Ferguson won low-gross honors with a six-under-par 64, one stroke better than Brad Maxwell's team with Bruce Rands, Ken Nott and Dick Sparks.

Mel Bridgman of Philadelphia Flyers and partners Mike Gray, Joe Burns and Tom Maffetuk finished third with a 66.

Ververgaert, conceded a "fair handicap" of 30, scored a gross 89 and was a runaway winner of the individual low-net with a 59. Former Uplands president Gord Pellow fired a two-under-par 68 to win low gross honors by three strokes over Ferguson and Nott.

While a final accounting hasn't been determined, officials estimate the Celebrity event will raise more than $2,000 for the Heart Foundation.

One of the stars of the day was National Hockey League great Bobby Orr. The former Bruin, now with Chicago Black Hawks, was a great hit with the gallery. He consistently invited trailing youngsters to play shots for him and, as a result, didn't turn in an individual score.

Bill Price had never won a points championship of his own in 12 years of driving at Western Speedway, but his knack for taking the big ones may change that.

Price moved to the front of the pack on the 42nd lap of Saturday night's 65-lap July Cup superstock feature and pulled away in his 1965 Chevelle for the checkered flag and 200 points in the driver standings.

Added to the 14 points he picked up for having second fastest time in the trials (Bob Collins had fast time and 15 points) — the main-event triumph enabled Price to increase his 78-point lead over Collins to 132 points.

In addition to his fast-time points, Collins collected 15 points for finishing third in the fast heat and 130 for placing third in the main event. That gave him 160 for the night and left him with 1,095 on the season. Price has 1,227.

SUPER-STOCKS
JULY CUP (65 laps): 1. Bill Price; 2. Al Wade; 3. Bob Collins; 4. Jim Hamilton; 5. Ron Peller; 6. Gary Heatley; 7. Orron Kerr; 8. Glen Hay; 9. Collins; 10. Mike Gifford.
FIRST HEAT: 1. Neil Moore; 2. Dave Delyar; 3. Nick Kyreto; 4. Jim Hamilton.
TROPHY DASH: 1. Ferrie; 2. Collins; 3. Price; 4. Hamilton.

The closest Price, 29, had come to the top of the heap was nine years ago when he shared first place in the stock car division with Mel Marshall.

Price now has won four main events at Western compared to five for Collins, but included in Price's victories are both double-pointers run so far. The other was the Roy from laps seven to 41 before giving way to Price. Veteran Tom Hamilton of Campbell River took fourth and Ray Vatcher was sixth.

It was a frustrating night for Jim Caudwell, third in the driver standings going into Saturday's race. He blew an engine early in the evening but rushed his car back to the shop, dropped his car back to the shop, and made it back in time to start the feature at the tail end of the 18-car pack. He began moving up early but spun on lap 12 and remained near the back of the field the rest of the night.

Billy Hitchcox, who held a 401-point lead in the hobby stock standings prior to Saturday's program, widened his lead by winning both the 10-lap heat race and 15-lap

White Memorial.

Price felt a change in engines helped Saturday. "We went from a 307 (cubic-inch displacement) to a 327 and we had to add about 960 pounds to stay within the engine-to-weight ratio," he said.

"With the smaller engine we just didn't have enough power."

Some quick work on a broken axle by owner-mechanic Dave Bickerdike and his crew kept Price alive. The axle on the Garden City Auto Special went in a heat-race tangle with Jerry Ferrie, who broke a steering box but got back in time for the main event, when he finished fifth.

Billy Hitchcox, who held a 401-point lead in the hobby stock standings prior to Saturday's program, widened his lead by winning both the 10-lap heat race and 15-lap feature. A couple of tangles in the 13-car heat race sidelined Rick Bennett, Gordie Hildebrandt and Wayne Johnson. Attendance was 2,025.

Islander In Final

Rowers Only Close

MONTREAL (CP) — East Germany dominated the Olympic rowing finals as expected during the weekend. Canada drew a blank in the medal department, but the Canadians convinced themselves that they are a rising power in rowing.

While the East Germans were winning nine gold medals—four by the women Saturday and five Sunday by the men—the Canadians showed that they have made significant progress in the last four years.

Canada didn't have a rowing finalist in 1972 at Munich. This year Canada placed fifth in the men's coxed fours.

In the inaugural women's Olympic rowing program, Canada had three in the finals.

Alan Roaf of Burnaby, B.C., one of the Canadian coaches, says he is "proud of the entire team."

"We need to keep people like Roaf because he is possibly the best coach in the world right now," said Ian Gordon of Burnaby.

Gordon and his crew-mates — Brian Dick and Andy Van Ruyan of St. Catharines, Ont., and Philip Monkton of London, Ont.—are the first Canadians to reach an Olympic rowing final since George Hungerford and Roger Jackson won the coxed pairs in 1964 at Tokyo.

The coxed fours crew, second and fastest qualifiers behind the East Germans, set a slow start and fell well behind in the first 500 metres.

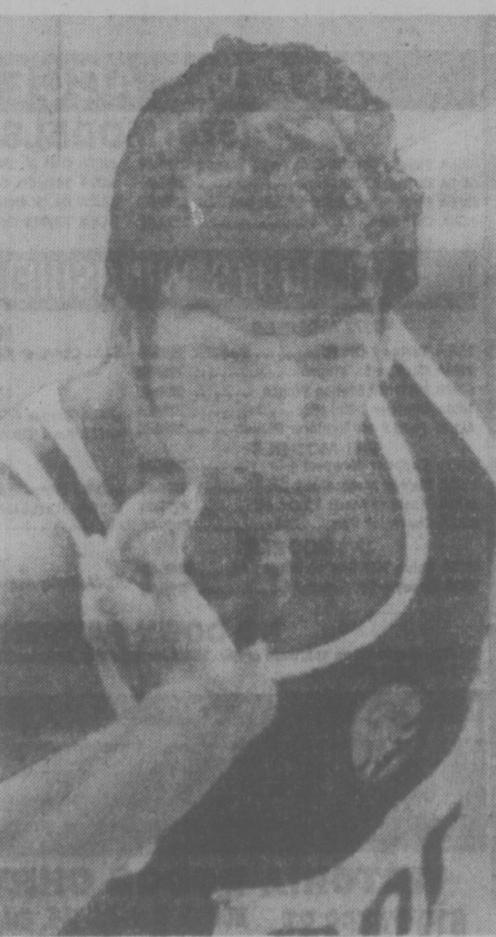

The East German men added two silver medals and one bronze to their total Sunday, their gold monopoly broken only by the Soviet Union in the coxed fours, Norway in the double sculls and a 23-year-old Finn in the single sculls.

The best showing for the Canadian women came in the eights when they finished fourth, just a couple of strokes behind the United States crew.

More Medals in Pool

MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian girls won two more bronze medals and American girls finally scored a victory over East Germany on the final night of Olympic Games swimming competition Sunday.

Nancy Garapick, 14, of Halifax won her second individual bronze medal when she finished third in the 200-metre backstroke in 2:15.60. East German Ulrike Richter won the gold in 2:13.43 and teammate Birgit Trelber took the silver in 2:14.87.

"I couldn't see Birgit, but I knew Ulrike would be up there so I just tried to keep up to her," Garapick said of her fourth major backstroke defeat to the East Germans in two years.

Canadian girls picked up their final swimming medal when they finished third in the 4x100 freestyle relay behind the United States and East Germany.

That raised Canada's swimming medal total to two silver and six bronze, their highest count ever. In Munich they had two silver and two bronze.

Canada picked up its second silver medal Saturday night when two Edmonton natives, Cheryl Gibson and Becky Smith, finished 2-3 in the 400-metre individual medley.

Ulrike Tauber of East Germany won the gold in world record time of 4:42.71 with Gibson finishing in 4:46.10 and Smith in 4:50.45.

"I didn't think I could beat Birgit tonight," said Gibson, who now trains in Vancouver. "I was never as good as Birgit, but after the butterfly I was a bit ahead of her... I knew if I stayed ahead I would get something."

The victory by the U.S.

girls came in the final race of the Games and marked the first time the East German women had been beaten by Americans.

"We can't tell you how great it feels," said Shirley Babashoff. "All week long we've been beaten by them and now, finally, we got a little revenge."

The U.S. finished in 3:44.82 for a world record, East Germany clocked 3:45.50 and Canada finished in 3:45.81.

Swimming for Canada was Gall Amundson of Vancouver, Barbara Clark of Stettler, Alta., Smith and Anne Jardin of Pointe Claire, Que.

"Becky and I already had a medal here, but Gall and Barbara didn't so we really worked hard because we wanted to get one for them," said Jardin.

Petra Thuner of East Germany won the women's 500-metre freestyle in world record time of 3:37.14 to nip Babashoff; Jim Montgomery of the U.S. set a world record of 4:49 seconds to win the 100 freestyle ahead of team-mate Jack Babashoff; and American Rod Strachan lowered the world 400 individual medley record to 4:25.68 to take the gold medal ahead of fellow American Tim McKee.

Those results left the U.S. with 13 gold medals, 14 silver and seven bronze; East Germany with 11 gold, two silver and two bronze; and the Soviet Union with one gold, three silver and five bronze. Canada was fourth in the medal standings.

Although Canada picked up a pair of medals Sunday, they missed on others. Shannon Smith of Vancouver finished sixth in the 300 freestyle in 3:45.15 after leading for the first 300 metres, Graham

Smith of Thunder Bay, Ont., finished fifth in the 400 individual medley in 4:23.64, and Wendy Hogg of Vancouver faded badly in the final 100 metres and finished eighth in the 200 backstroke in 2:17.95.

Saturday night, David Wilkie of Britain broke the American domination of the men's events by winning the 200 breaststroke in 2:15.11, a world record. John Hencken of the U.S. former record holder and defending champion, finished second. Graham Smith, an Edmonton native, was fourth in 2:19.42, two-tenths of a second behind American Rick Colella.

John Naber of the U.S. won his fourth gold medal in the 200 backstroke with a time of 1:59.19 to lower his own world record; and East Germany's Hannelore Anke picked up the other gold medal Saturday in the 100-metre breaststroke.

fourth over all after three of five events of the women's pentathlon. The final two events, the long jump and 200-metre sprint, will be held today.

Jones was third in her heat of the 100-metre hurdles, fifth in the shot put and fourth in the high jump for a total of 2,795 points. Nadejda Tikhchenko of the Soviet Union leads with 2,864 points.

Mary Stride of St. Catharines, Ont., Joyce Yakubowich of Victoria and Rachelle Campbell of Guelph, Ont., all advanced to the second round of the women's 400-metre event.

Marjorie Bailey of Vancouver and Patty Loverock, also of Vancouver, failed to qualify for the women's 100-metre final.

On Saturday, Bruce Simpson of Ottawa qualified for today's final of the pole vault, easily making the qualifying standard of 5.10 metres (16 feet, 8 1/2 inches).

Two Canadians emerged as medal contenders Sunday.

Phil Olsen of Nanaimo, B.C., easily qualified for today's javelin final with a Commonwealth record throw of 87.76 metres (287 feet, 11 inches).

He finished third best among the qualifiers.

A Butt, Blood and Tears in Ring

MONTREAL (CP) — A river of blood poured down Chris Clarke's face in the third round of an Olympic boxing match Sunday and all he had to show for three years of preparation was a five-stitch cut on his left eye.

The 19-year-old southpaw from Halifax was forced to retire with 29 seconds remaining in the last round when a butt by Jozsef of Hungary sliced his brow, just when the Canadian appeared within reach of a victory that would have carried him into the quarter-finals of the light-welterweight division.

Clarke failed to keep tears from his eyes as he explained how much effort had gone into his career, highlighted by a gold medal in the 1975 Pan-American Games.

"Right now I'd have to say it wasn't worth it," he said. "I worked at it for a long time and it (an Olympic gold medal) was so close and it wasn't worth it."

He said he probably will retire, "but I won't know for a couple of months."

"The next Olympics is four years away and that's a long time to look ahead. There's no way I'll turn pro. All I want now is a good job."

Clarke was one of three Canadian boxing losers in a weekend salvaged by Carmen from his eyes as he explained how much effort had gone into his career, highlighted by a gold medal in the 1975 Pan-American Games.

"Right now I'd have to say it wasn't worth it," he said. "I worked at it for a long time and it (an Olympic gold medal) was so close and it wasn't worth it."

He said he probably will retire, "but I won't know for a couple of months."

"The next Olympics is four years away and that's a long time to look ahead. There's no way I'll turn pro. All I want now is a good job."

My Boy K.K. No Longer A Claimer

VANCOUVER (CP) — My Boy K. K., a $4,000 claim on the opening day of the season, made it all the way to the top Saturday at Exhibition Park by winning the $10,000-added North Vancouver Handicap.

The four-year-old gelding was haltered by trainer George Cummings for Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Fediw on April 19 and even before Saturday's win was considered the claim of the season.

He had won five races and $15,309 going into the North Vancouver — more than triple his claiming tag. The victory in the stakes event added another $6,685 to his earnings.

My Boy K. K. had tried the handicap division twice before, finishing out of the money both times.

Oil Producer Rejects Pounds

LONDON (Reuter) — Abu Dhabi has decided to stop taking part of its oil payments in British currency and will henceforth receive only dollars, banking sources here said Friday. The sources said the switch brings Abu Dhabi into line with most other major oil producers and should have little serious impact on the pound.

Few Clues in Bomb Death

DUBLIN (UPI) — Fingergrips on a discarded green helmet and a vague description of a getaway car were the only significant clues today in the hunt for the killers of British ambassador Christopher Ewart-Biggs.

Irish police said they were looking for a dark beige or sand-colored Ford spotted near the scene of the landmine blast that killed Ewart-Biggs and a woman secretary in Dublin last week.

They said the killers placed the explosive in a culvert underneath a road near the ambassador's residence and then detonated it as his official car passed by.

Detectives found fingerprints believed to belong to one of the assassins on a green construction worker's helmet in a nearby field but could not find matching prints in their files.

NEW YORK (AP) — American ballerina Sallie Wilson's solo performance was executed with elan — she threw a drink in the face of New York Times critic Clive Barnes.

"I was standing right across from him. There was a coffee table between us. He looked up and said, 'Hello, Sally dear.' I smiled and said hello and threw my drink in his face."

"Boy was that fun, though!" It happened Friday night in the press room at the Metropolitan Opera House during the intermission of a performance of the National Ballet of Canada.

What aroused Miss Wilson's ire was the newspaper critic's review of Fall River Legend in which he did not mention her. Barnes wrote approvingly of Marcia Haydee's performance and added:

"In the ballet's early days I recall Nora Kaye and Alicia Alonso in the part. They both had a fierceness, an imagination, that has perhaps been lacking in the role before Miss Haydee."

"This is a ballet that I have done for 11 years," said a fuming Miss Wilson, a principal dancer with the American Ballet Theatre. "Marcia Haydee did it for the first time the other day and he implied that what I'd done was worthless. Something rose up in me."

She had planned "to have a strong word with him if I saw him."

But upon seeing Barnes she succumbed to impulse, she said, and tossed her scotch on the rocks in his face.

"He had a very shocked look. Someone said he muttered, 'Thank you.' I didn't stay to converse."

"I left the room, sailed through the lobby smiling at people and went and had a glass of champagne out front. I received a lot of congratulations from friends."

Barnes was not immediately available for comment.

Miss Wilson said she did not sleep all night, worrying about what trouble she might have got into.

But, she said: "It was a most satisfying experience."

CULT BREAKER JAILED

SANTA ANA, Calif. (UPI) — A one-year jail term has begun for Ted Patrick, religious "deprogrammer" praised by his supporters for rescuing confused youths from mental slavery to strange cults and condemned by opponents as a vigilante trampling on freedom of religion and choice.

"I am going to jail for an honorable cause," said Patrick, 46, of San Diego, as he surrendered at the Orange County jail late Saturday night to begin serving terms for false imprisonment and probation violation.

He said he would continue his controversial work when he is freed.

Patrick worked with parents of youths who joined unusual religious groups, such as Hare Krishnas, the Rev. Sun Moon's Unification Church and "Jesus Freak" cults.

Patrick and the family take youths away from the group to an isolated place, often a motel room, guarded by sturdy male relatives where he could preach and argue with them for hours to convince them they had been brainwashed into accepting false doctrine.

Patrick contended the youths had been "psychologically kidnapped," bringing misery to their families, and he was rescuing them. Supporters, including many parents who recovered their children, argued that the youths had been pressured into joining the groups by intensive indoctrination in isolated settings — "programming" — and the same tactics were needed to "deprogram" them.

They said the cults often require devotees to surrender all their possessions and cut off all ties with families and other non-believers.

Cult leaders and others accused Patrick of kidnapping and denying the youths — including many over 18 and hence, legally adults — freedom to choose their own religion.

There Goes The Record

EAU CLAIRE, Mich. (UPI) — Richard Hahn popped a cherry in his mouth, ate it up and spit the pit 47 feet, one and one-half inches Saturday to win the third annual International Cherry Spit-off.

The performance may also earn the 47-year-old Whirlpool employee from Benton Harbor a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records. The current record of 38 feet, three and one-half inches was set in 1974 by an Englishman.

Last year's spit-off winner won with a 25-feet, eight and one-half inch performance.

Hahn said he had no prior experience with cherry pit spitting, but said he always considered himself pretty good at bubble gum spitting.

The rules for the spit-off are rigorous. Contestants must eat the cherry whole, then spit the pit within 60 seconds from the time they are called to the line. The best of three spits is the one that counts.

Contestants must keep their hands at their sides and must remove their dentures, if they have any.

Nazi's Corpse a Trick?

VIENNA — Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal says he doubts that the charred body found in the smouldering ruins of a house in Travers, France, on July 14 was that of former S.S. Col. Joachim Pfeifer.

Wiesenthal told Austrian Radio that he believed the whole thing could have been a trick so that Peiper could now disappear.

HONG KONG — Hsu Chin-Chiang, a leader of China's energy and chemical industries, died last week in Peking, the New China News Agency reported. He was 61.

WINNIPEG — The Mayor of Winnipeg, Stephen Juba, was reported in good condition in hospital today suffering from a kidney stone. No surgery is planned.

LONDON — Jon Swain, a foreign correspondent with The Sunday Times and Britain's journalist of the year in 1975, has been missing in Ethiopia for more than a month, his newspaper reported Sunday.

The newspaper says Swain, 28, disappeared while on an assignment to witness the progress of a peasant army mobilized by the Ethiopian government against guerrillas in the northern province of Eritrea.

KINGS POINT — Reinstated U.S. merchant marine cadet Nancy Donnelly, who says she was unfairly forced to resign for allegedly being found in bed with her cadet fiance, is due back at Kings Point, today — still facing disciplinary charges.

The 20-year-old Miss Donnelly, a first-year cadet, was reinstated by the U.S. maritime administration following the intercession of Sen. Glenn Bell (Rep.-Md.) and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Victim at Fault

REGINA (CP) — The Saskatchewan Crimes Compensation Board has awarded $5,976 to an accident victim, saying the amount would have been twice as great if the man had not contributed to his own misfortune by accepting a ride with an intoxicated driver.

The board gave the compensation for pain and lost wages suffered by Kenneth Michayluk, 20, of Prince Albert, estimating the pain compensation at $10,000 and the lost wages at $1,953.

The total was reduced by 5 per cent.

The board said Michayluk, who lost almost all vision in one eye and has a permanently-deformed pelvis, was drinking with the driver of the car involved in the accident.

MAN-EATING LION

KINGS MILLS, Ohio (AP) — A 20-year-old ranger at Kings Island Amusement Park was killed by a lion Saturday, a park spokesman said.

He said McCann's body was found about 20 feet from his vehicle, which contained his shotgun and radio.

Brazil's Cancelled People Live On

By BRUCE HANDLER
Washington Post

RIO DE JANEIRO — Prominent figures in Brazil who were removed from the political scene by the Anti-Communist military regime that now controls the country are finding it impossible to return to the public arena, even though their original punishments have expired.

After the current government came to power in a 1964 coup, it got rid of hundreds of its real and imagined enemies — in an ingenious and rather humane way — by declassing them to be cassados. This is a Portuguese word, meaning "the cancelled ones." Civil servants, university professors and even some military officers were barred from participating in all political activity for 10 years.

The punishment, it should be noted, was used only against people the new regime did not consider directly threatening to its power. Brazilians who joined guerrilla bands or participated actively in the outlawed Communist party — or who were even suspected of doing so — were rounded up and jailed; sometimes they were tortured and killed.

Theoretically, Brazil's cassados should be filtering back into national politics, because bars against them began expiring in 1974. But in practice, various "catch 22s" have emerged, and the cassados remain outside even the limited political structure that the present regime allows to operate.

A recent law stipulates that once a person has been a cassado, he can never again run for office in Brazil even after his punishment period is over. A few months ago, a Brazilian electoral court ruled that former cassados cannot even rejoin political parties.

"According to simple arithmetic, 10 years is 10 years, but in Brazil, 10-year punishments have become eternal," laments Ulysses Guimaraes, president of the Brazilian Democratic Movement, which is the lone opposition political party currently permitted here.

"Even for murder, the maximum sentence in Brazil is just 30 years," another party official noted glumly.

The military regime makes no effort to gloss over the discrepancy between what it said it would do a decade ago and what actually is happening now.

Justice Minister Armando Falcao has stated: "The fact that time-periods of certain measures have expired has no special significance. The revolution (as the post-1964 government here calls itself) will in no way permit the comeback of persons responsible for the situation that threatened to lead the country to chaos, whether or not any time-periods are up."

Cassados in Brazil generally have decided it isn't worth it to fight the system. They are not pushing the government to make good on the originally stated conditions. In fact, a great number of these former public figures are much better off financially today than when they were involved in politics.

Brazil's three living civilian former presidents, for example, all of whom were declared cassados by the military regime, are doing well.

Joao Goulart, whose leftist, financially disastrous administration the present government overthrew, is a prosperous cattle rancher in neighboring Uruguay. His predecessor, Janio Quadros, lives comfortably but quietly in Sao Paulo, Brazil's biggest city, where he writes dictionaries and paints pictures. Juscelino Kubitschek, who was president from 1955-61, now is a millionaire investment banker in Rio.

None of the former chief executives seems interested in returning to politics.

"Being a cassado is like having a benign tumor," an ex-politician in the southern state of Rio Grande do Sul said in an interview. "At first it bothers you, but later you realize you can live with it." The man now is a successful lawyer and radio-TV personality.

Handguns Banned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Walter Washington has signed a bill to ban the possession of handguns in this capital by private citizens who have not already registered them. The measure forbids possession of handguns by anyone except police officers and special guards unless the weapons are registered with the city before the law takes effect.

Lemons Aren't Just for Car Lots

Once a luxury in countries where they could not be grown, fresh lemons today are a food item for the home-maker who intends maintaining a high nutrition standard for the family in spite of high food prices. While no longer a low priced fruit, lemons nevertheless have much to offer when used in clever combinations with many other foods.

Here are a few facts about lemons to help you get the most out of them, plus hints for their use in every day meals prepared in the home.

For best juice value, choose those with thin smooth skins. The thicker skinned lemons are fine if wanted for crystallizing the rind in syrup to use in cake making and decorating. There is no waste if you choose the kind most suitable to your purpose.

Although these fruits keep well in the vegetable bins of the refrigerator, a cold lemon yields less juice than when warm. Heat the whole lemon in boiling water for two minutes, then cold enough for handling. The skin will be cleaner too for grating if wanted.

When rind is wanted without the bitterness of the white pith, beneath, strip off the rind with a swivel-bladed paring knife. This does a nice job without getting into grated with a small hand grinder. A small amount of rind can be grated off the whole lemon with a flat or round grater.

With concentrated flavor in the rind, homemakers will find dozens of flavoring uses for the outer skins, thus reducing the use of artificial coloring and flavoring in daily foods.

Grated lemon peel is used in cookies or a little is scattered on top before baking. Or add a teaspoonful to a thin icing glaze to decorate a fruit loaf.

The home candying, or crystallizing, of the thicker peels of both lemons and oranges, for use in Christmas and Thanksgiving cakes, breads, puddings, and mincemeat, saves considerable expense for ingredients and you know that you are adding nothing but the real goodness of a natural product. The dried peel can be used too for top decorations in place of sugar icing.

The crystallizing of peel is an art centuries old, and many of us remember it being done in our own homes earlier in this century. Remove the peel with some of the white pith.

Half skins are commonly peeled off by hand after warming the fruit. Simmer gently in a sugar or honey syrup until almost fork tender.

Lift from syrup into a bowl and pour surplus syrup into the concave peels. Allow to set for several days, and harden at room temperature. Store in a tin with layers of waxed paper.

Lemon juice has long been known as a meat and fish tenderizer in place of vinegar. A marinade of juice with a little brown sugar rubbed over the surface of a pot roast of beef or a cottage roll taking the place of ham for budget watchers, helps to break down the coarser fiber during cooking. With veal, leave out the sugar.

Home-raised vegetables will have more of their natural color appeal if prepared with aid of lemon juice.

To prevent discoloring of green globe artichokes, of tuberous Jerusalem artichokes and of salisbury (Vegetable Oyster), sprinkle fresh lemon juice over the cut surfaces immediately they are exposed to air. This does not change the flavor, merely retains the natural color, the vitamins which deteriorate on contact with air (especially Vitamin C), and brings out the rather delicate taste.

Potatoes and cauliflower remain white when a teaspoon of fresh lemon juice is added to the cooking water. Scientists tell us it is the Vitamin C in lemon juice which is responsible for this action. Since few of us in northern areas get enough of this elusive element from local foods, every little helps.

If your hair is the worse for summer wear, try this: Add one tablespoon of Swiss friss herbs (buy in health food stores) to a pint of mineral water. Let it come to a boil, then simmer for five minutes. Strain and apply the lotion to the scalp and hair. Don't rinse it out. It will make the

MOTHER SPOTTED SURGERY ERROR

TORONTO (CP) — The mother of a six-week-old boy says her son might have undergone the wrong surgery at Toronto's Sick Children's Hospital last week if she had not noticed a mistake on the medical chart attached to his crib.

Helen Marinoff of Mississauga, said that her son, Kevin, was in hospital to have a hernia operation. She said she examined Kevin's chart while he was being taken to the operating room and noticed that he had been booked for a circumcision and an examination of the windpipe.

Mrs. Marinoff asked that the head nurse be notified of the mistake. Eventually, the head nurse spoke to Dr. Siegmund Ein, the surgeon scheduled to perform the operation, and the matter was cleared up.

TRAVELLERS CONFUSED

OWEN SOUND, Ont. (CP) — Lee Manor residents are amused by many travellers asking for a night's lodging only to find that it is a home for the aged, says administrator Paul Butcher.

The source of confusion is a billboard near here advertising a neighboring hotel. Reeve Lyall McInnis has asked for a new Lee Manor sign.

Rust Removers: Don't Follow Label

By A. J. HAND

"Brush it on. Wash it off." That's the recipe for rust removal you'll find on most rust-remover labels. Sound too good to be true? Well, it is too good to be true. I've followed those instructions with a variety of rust removers and, in every case, the rust stayed put.

Don't get me wrong, rust removers will work — they just won't work if you follow the directions on the label. The directions, it seems, were written to make the products seem easy to use, rather than to help you get rid of rust.

So, here are a set of directions that work. You might like to cut them out and paste them over the label on that container of rust remover sitting on the shelf out in your garage.

Start by cleaning the rust-coated object — the remover works only if it can reach the rust. But often the rust is coated with a film of oil and grime. A spray-type cleaner such as Fantastik will remove the film and let the remover get down to business.

Now you can apply the rust remover. If the object you're working on is small enough, it's best to soak it in the remover. If that's not possible, brush the stuff on. Apply a thick coat. Low temperatures inhibit the action of chemical rust removers, so be sure to work at room temperature or higher. If you work outside on a hot day, expect the rust remover to evaporate. Check every so often and brush on more if required.

Leave the rust remover in place for about two hours. During that time, it helps to run the remover into the rust with a wad of steel wool. This will break up the outer layers of rust and help the remover penetrate down to bare metal.

Wear rubber gloves while you do this work. No remover I've ever used has irritated my skin, but they all sting if they get into cuts.

When the soaking time is up wash off the remover. A quick rinse won't do the job. As soon as the water dries you'll be faced with a powdery film of residue. So wash the remover off with warm water, detergent and a stiff brush. Then rinse and let dry.

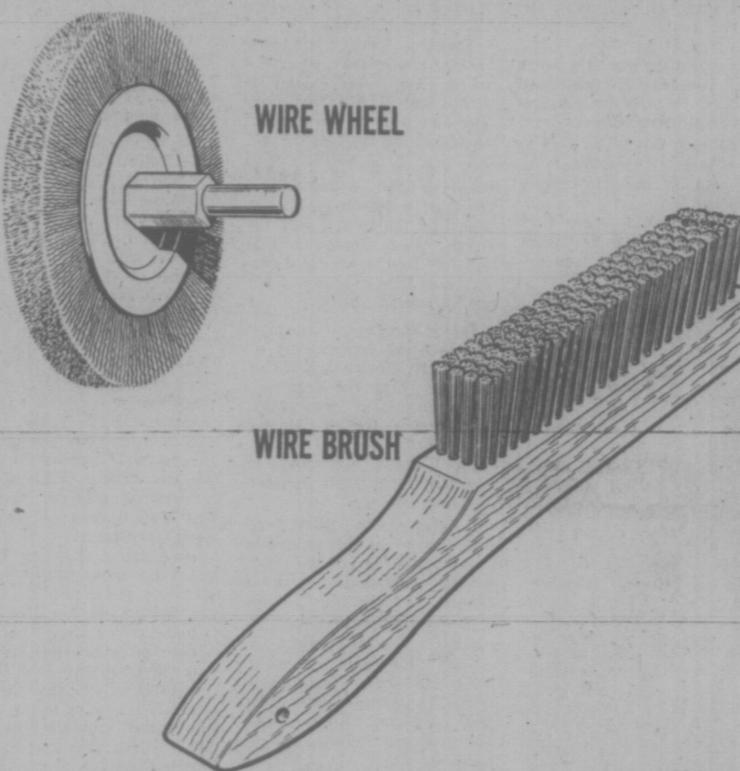

All common rust removers work on the acid-etch principle. Once they work their way down through the rust to the metal, they etch the surface slightly. This creates a "toothed" surface, just right for good paint adhesion. If you want to paint the derusted object, you can do so as soon as it dries. Apply a coat of primer under your chosen topcoat. The finish will adhere better with a primer, and future rusting will be much less likely.

If the object you've cleaned is a tool or other implement that won't be painted, you still have another step to follow. The surface of the object will be clean but dull. You can brighten it up in a hurry with a quick wire brushing. Easiest way to do the job is with a wire wheel chuck in an electric drill. A wire-bristled brush and a little elbow grease will do the job if you don't have a drill.

Note: The wire brushing polishes the metal and removes the toothy texture left behind by the rust remover. Paint will stick better to the unbrushed surface. So if you plan to paint, don't wire-brush.

We bought a new VW bus in July 1975. The fuel-injection system never has worked right. Even after taking it in for work time and again, the engine still knocks out at odd moments. The bus is under warranty, but it's fast running out. So is our patience; we're getting mad. What can we do? — KONKING

Dear Konking:

By all means get mad. A little screaming and yelling at your local service manager often works wonders. If it doesn't, ask for the name and phone number of VW's regional service manager, and get reasonably tough with him. Unfortunately, it sometimes takes some well-aimed rantings to get dealer service departments off their duffs, especially for warranty work.

Dear Mike:

I own a 1973 Audi Fox with 23,000 miles. The engine idles very roughly when hot. Cold or on short city hops, it's fine. What gives? — FOXY LADY

Dear Foxy:

Could be gasoline percolating inside your carburetor. Or a vacuum leak opening up when metal expands (e.g. carb-to-manifold mating surfaces). Or carbon buildup on a spark plug or inside a combustion chamber. A shop with a good tuneup machine can pinpoint the problem right quick if you bring the car in hot.

Dear Mike:

Unless I let my 1975 Dart warm up for 5-10 minutes, it simply won't move out. It's the Slant Six. Once it's warm, it runs fine. It always starts, though, hot or cold. — WASTING TIME.

Dear Wasting: The 1975 Slant Six has an electric choke. Heat sensors open contacts, which release the choke at a pre-set engine temperature. The idea is to open the choke quickly to reduce raw hydrocarbon emissions. The contacts are adjustable, so you CAN set the choke to stay shut longer. I suggest, though, that you have a trained mechanic do this. And actually, you should always let an engine warm up at least 2-3 minutes. I don't care what the factories tell you — warmups do increase engine life and greatly improve driveability.

Dear Mike:

I own a 1971 Mustang 302 ran fine until some clown at school got under my hood and opened the points all the way. Since then, the engine misses about 45 mph. I've done everything — changed practically the whole ignition system, all filters, even put on a new carburetor. I'm stumped.

Dear Stumped:

Let's assume the opening of the points did cause your problem. Your distributor might be worn. Or the vacuum control or mechanical distributor advance might not be working properly. Improper advance could be opening your points too wide again. Check your distributor on an ignition machine.

Insurance Rates Lowered by AIB

OTTAWA (CP) — The anti-inflation board said Thursday it has persuaded some insurance companies voluntarily to reduce proposed rate increases and said it is closely monitoring others.

However the board said in a statement that larger auto insurance companies that are required to notify the board in advance of planned price changes have been permitted increases up to 16 per cent.

Wage increases under the federal anti-inflation program are generally held to eight per cent in the first year of a contract.

The board cited the case of Guardian Insurance Co. of Canada, which it said agreed to reduce to 11.5 per cent a planned 15.5-per-cent price rise.

General insurance companies increased their rates twice during 1975 by a total of about 26 per cent to offset 1974 underwriting losses, the board said.

It noted that new draft regulations for profit increases announced in the May 25 budget contain special provisions for insurance companies.

These are necessary because the general rule restricting acceptable profit increases to 8.5 per cent of the 1975 total might force some insurers to continue operating at a loss, the board said.

As a result, companies that had losses are being allowed to earn up to three per cent of gross revenues from operations in addition to their earnings from equity.

Touch-Up Job Opened Career

By SHAWN KENNEDY

N.Y. Times

It was to be a simple paint job for the bathroom. But no sooner had Annie Baker and David Wolman picked up their brushes than it was decided that what the bathroom really deserved was a neoclassical mural, based on "Lord of the Rings," by John Tolkein, their favorite fantasy.

"We couldn't stop there," Miss Baker explained. "The bathroom was so beautiful in the rest of the apartment we had to even things up." So then they painted a Pennsylvania Dutch motif along the walls and ceiling in the dining room and spruced up the foyer with a jelly-bean-colored paint job in bright red, purple and green. Soon the living-room floor wore a green and white Art Deco design.

Today, two years after that simple bathroom paint job, Miss Baker and Wolman have a uniquely decorated apartment and new careers as well. They now hire themselves out as muralists, graphic artists and floor painters.

"We had such a fantastic time doing the apartment and discovered that we worked well together and that our artistic ideas and skills were complementary," Wolman said.

So we started our business, "Homeworks," about a year ago," added Miss Baker as she sat curled up on the old-fashioned porch swing that hangs in the living room of their apartment here.

Their stylized version of a sand-colored westbound "highway" zooming toward brown, orange and white "mountains" covers the downstairs' wall in Max's Kansas City restaurant. Another mural, a plastic abstract cityscape, decorates the showroom of a Manhattan carpet manufacturer.

For their services, Miss Baker and Wolman charge $25 an hour. That usually works out, they said, to be $300 to $1,500 a job, depending on the complexity and the size of the surface.

While a do-it-yourself paint job led Annie Baker and David Wolman into the murals business, two young New York women hit on the idea of an artistic partnership over a reunion lunch. They settled on wall art as their vehicle later.

A week after that lunch, Sherry Lieberman, a commercial art world dropout, and her former classmate at Queens College, Brenda Eisenberg, a sculptor, had their first assignment.

The study team concluded that although mothers may be the primary caretakers for an infant, fathers play an important and supplemental role from a much earlier age than is sometimes believed.

'The Soo': History Amid Bustle

I'm just back from a week's visit to Sault Ste. Marie, an Ontario city that sits comfortably along the St. Mary's River, between Lake Superior and Lake Huron, and with a series of locks joining these two great bodies of water.

Granted, it was a 'quickie' visit, in which much of the week was taken up attending the 25th biennial convention of the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women, where I have been active for over 35 years.

Nevertheless, I did find time to visit around a bit and to make some interesting discoveries about a city that until now I had merely known by name.

'The Soo' as so many of its residents call it, was the ancient home of the Algonquin Indians.

Today, with its population of 78,000, it is the home of the Algoma Steel Corporation, with a payroll that puts over $75 million a year into the local economy.

Also located there is the Abitibi Power and Paper Company, which began operations in 1896. Another major industry is the Weyerhaeuser (Ontario) Limited hardwood veneer mill.

Ojibway Indians gave the place its first name of Bawating, to pinpoint rapids in the St. Mary's River, south of the city.

When Jesuit missionaries founded a mission there in elizabeth

1668, they named it Sault Ste. Marie.

In a quick tour of the city I was shown the site of a North West Company fur trade post founded in 1783, on what is now South Huron Street.

That post was taken over by the Hudson's Bay Company in 1821 and continued to operate until 1867.

It was taken to what they call the Ermatinger Old Stone House, built in 1814, and described as the oldest stone house west of Toronto.

From a lovely park with flowers and historic plaques, I had a view of the graceful international bridge that links the Soo with its counterpart Sault Ste. Marie in Michigan.

A visit to the famed locks was also laid on, and there I received a lesson in history, including the fact it was the North West Company that built the first small canal (designed to float canoes and bateaux) back in 1797-99.

That canal, now partially reconstructed on property of the Abitibi Power and Paper Company, was the predecessor of the great locks which now bypass the St. Mary's rapids.

First main one, still in operation, was built between 1888 and 1895.

Looking out and down from my window in the relatively new Holiday Inn, on the river, I gazed almost directly west toward the locks.

It was an ever-changing scene! Busy! Never still!

Grain ship from the west; freighters loaded with iron from the mines of Minnesota and Michigan; lumber and pulp carriers from above Lake Superior.

Below, at a small pier, the S.S. Mark Twain, a replica of a southern river boat and the smaller flag-decked Mv Bon Soo, took off regularly for lock and river cruises.

I was also fortunate to be at my window when several large river canoes manned by modern-day voyageurs, passed on their way to the Civic Centre, to be formally welcomed.

This was a 26-man group retracing — as an American bicentennial project — a 1,200 mile journey made by Sieur De Laut in 1768, between Montreal and Duluth.

After the civic reception they passed through the locks and on to the American city.

That Civic Centre, by the way, is located in the most prominent part of a riverfront urban renewal area.

The waters of the St. Mary's River surround it on three sides and the whole area has been built up in a series of paved or landscaped terraces.

Inside there is a four-story indoor garden with tropical plants and a penthouse gallery at roof level giving a view of boats on the river, the opposite shore and the St. Mary's rapids.

A hint of nostalgia came after the convention ended when many of us took a day-long trip aboard the Algoma Central Railway, to Agawa Canyon, a scenic spot back in the hills (or should I say mountains) above Lake Superior.

There were 20 coaches and a diner, headed by three diesel units. The road bed was smooth. There was no great speed.

At the canyon their is a well-maintained park with wide trails along the Agawa River and up to several lookout spots.

There will be those who read this column who could tell me much more about The Soo, the St. Mary's River and the Agawa Canyon, than I was able to find out in the week I was there.

Some day I may go back again. If I do, it will be in the autumn and I'll take the canyon trip again. For I'm certain the colors along the way would then be breath-taking.

In the meantime I must be content with the few memories I acquired of a city that has its own particular charm and a countryside that blends well into the over-all mosaic we call Canada.

Dear Lynn and Joel:

I have recently acquired a "Moon Valley" plant about six inches high. Could you please detail what these plants require as light, humidity, repotting, and so forth? Also, how quickly will they grow? — C.J.

Dear C.J.:

We're presuming that you're referring to the Moon Valley, a lovely, brown and darker brown-bordered oval leaf plant that bears batches of delicate pink flowers from time to time. (If not, no matter. We've had so much mail about Pilea we needed an excuse to answer it, any how.) The other varieties of Pilea that are more commonly seen are the Aluminum plant, a smaller "Leafeed," silvery-mottled beauty, and oddly enough, the Artillery plant, which would appear to be a fern, is also a member of the vast Pilea good, indirect light, DO NOT REPOT until roots show through the drainage hole (so many people can't wait to transplant — but here patience is an absolute must), and feed once monthly with an acid-base food during the growing period, you should be able to keep those leaves from curling and drying up, and you'll probably be rewarded with some of those blooms we described above.

But don't you Aluminum plant or Artillery plant owners expect blooms from your Pilea. It just doesn't happen — something like getting blood from a turnip.

The Bridge Expert

Our South declarer in today's deal came up with a beautiful falsecard to try to get West to discontinue leading the latter's suit. But West, after studying everybody's play to the opening lead, concluded that South was "cheating." And the continuation of his suit at trick two brought about declarer's defeat.

Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ♦.

After West had opened the spade ace, declarer, before playing from dummy, paused to reflect on the bidding. A vulnerable West, opposite a partner who had passed West's opening bid, had rebid his spade suit missing the king and jack. Surely, South reasoned, West had a six-card suit — and, hence, East had a singleton spade.

If the defenders played correctly, South would go down. East would ruff a second spade lead, after which he would lead a diamond to West's ace (most assuredly, West possessed the diamond ace). A third spade lead would then be forthcoming, East ruffing for the setting trick.

South played the three of spades from dummy at trick one, East followed suit with the five, and South, in a heroic effort to prevent a spade continuation by West, falsecarded by dropping the king! It was now West's turn to do some thinking.

In the abstract, if West next led the spade queen, and South's king were a singleton, South would ruff; and simultaneously the board's jack of spades would be promoted into a winner. But, after a few moments of contemplation, West knew that South had faltered.

West asked himself: "Why would my partner, if he held the 6-5-4 of spades, have played the five?" He wouldn't, was the answer. He would play the four out of this perfectly commonplace holding.

So West, trusting his partner, led the spade queen, East discarding a diamond. To trick three West cashed the diamond ace, and to trick four he led a third spade, which east trumps for the setting trick.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be direct — build on solid base. If frank, you gain otherwise, you invite needless delay. Aquarius, Scorpio could be part of scenario. Emphasis on matters relating to lost objects, money in connection with partnership, mate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be an "investigator." Find reasons why for actions, responses. Gemini, Virgo could be in picture. Member of opposite sex finds you interesting, flatters you. Your marital status is spot-lighted. Check legal aspects — be aware of fine print.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New Moon now highlights responsibility connected with close neighbors, relatives. Home environment, basic emotional security figure prominently. Taurus, Libra Scorpio could be part of scenario. Be diplomatic — but keep within budget. You'll understand!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): One who cares for you reminds you of diet, nutritional requirements. Moderation now would be most constructive. Family relationships improve. Appreciate and encourage harmony. Appreciate and encourage harmony. Taurus is in picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money picture could dominate. Funds are major feature — and tight money could be order of day. Key now is to be discriminating. Take nothing for granted. Perfect techniques. Be aware of costs know that no one intends to give you something of value for nothing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have more responsibility than in past. This coincides with opportunity. You have more authority; your policies are put into motion. Cycle is high — you attract followers, backers and controversy. One who seemed mild, inconsequential, could be envious and be obvious about it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish rather than initiate — leap beyond apparent restrictions. You have good chance for better display and distribution. Aggressive associate makes inroads. Be supportive. You are "Popular" at behind scenes conference, meeting.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Highlight fresh approach, independence, creativity. Leo, Aquarius could be in picture. Friend, probably older, lends valuable material. Know it and don't let false pride block progress. Simply put: If you don't know — ask!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful — you are apt to get what you request. Means be mature enough to understand security requirements. What seems out-of-reach is not necessarily quality. Your own backyard could contain "acres of diamonds." One in authority lends support.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Travel, special studies, stimulating reading

A Leap Into Today—by Rail

KABUL—(Reuters) Backward Afghanistan has taken a leap into the modern age by embarking on an extensive railway system.

Neighboring Iran has given a friendly push by offering to lend whatever funds are necessary. The estimated cost is around $1 billion.

The network will complete the missing link in the rail system between Europe and the Indian sub-continent.

But it is much more significant to landlocked Afghanistan for its own political and economic reasons.

The proposed network will link Afghanistan directly with Iran and eventually with the Soviet Union on the north, thereby lessening dependence on transit facilities through Pakistan.

Politically, these alternative transit routes will give President Mohammad Daoud greater flexibility in dealing with Pakistan.

The Afghans regard the transit facility through Pakistan as a vulnerable pressure point because most of their imports and exports go through Pakistan's principal port, Karachi.

When tension rises between the two countries—and relations have been strained since Daoud came to power in 1973—Afghanistan accuses Pakistan of delaying vital goods in transit.

"Our transit trade means a lot to Pakistan financially and if there is a likelihood of it being diverted through some other country, they are sure to be more obliging," said an Afghan official.

Economically, the railway network should have a dramatic effect on Afghanistan's agricultural and industrial progress.

Government economists see it as a "spinal cord" of development in an arid and mountainous country of 17 million widely scattered tribal people.

The rail system is still in the early planning stages. A preliminary feasibility survey has been carried out and construction work is expected to start next year.

The first stage will be a link with Iran's railway line from Tehran, which will run from the Iranian border point of Islam Qala to the historical city of Herat in western Afghanistan.

From Herat, the 800-mile main line will go through the fertile fruit-growing Lashkar Valley to Kandahar, then north to the capital, Kabul.

Several branch lines are envisaged. Top priority will be given to one opening up the rich Hagiak iron ore deposit 70 miles northwest of Kabul.

The deposit is reported to be one of the biggest in the world consisting of two billion tons graded at 64 per cent. Much of the iron ore will be sold to Iran.

Another proposed branch line is from Lashkar to the cotton-growing Helmand Valley to Tarako for eventual access to Iran's east coast.

Diplomatic sources here think the Russians are suspicious of Iranian intentions in financing the railway project. For one thing, it would put Iran ahead of the Soviet Union as the biggest aid donor to Afghanistan.

The proposed railway network will be the same as one future stage is a link from Kandahar to the Pakistan border town of Chaman, which has a track to the Baluchistan provincial capital of Quetta and on to Karachi.

It would shorten the present transit route whereby goods are carried by rail from Karachi through Lahore to Peshawar and by truck across the border to Kabul.

The branch line would run from Herat north to the Soviet border. With the trend toward normalization on the subcontinent this would ultimately give the Russians rail access to India.

The trains can run for two or three years until the king's dream ended when he was deposed in 1929.

Oldtimers of Kabul actually saw trains running some 50 years ago.

The late king Amanullah built a short rail track from the centre of Kabul to suburban Darulaman, where he planned to establish a new European-style capital.

Afghanistan hopes the main system connecting Tehran to Herat, Kandahar and Kabul will be finished by 1983.

Sophisticated Hotel Training

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec's department of tourism, which began sponsoring training courses in bartending, professional cuisine and hotel management in 1969, recently consolidated the program under one roof in a unique ultra-modern facility.

The Institute of Tourism and Hotel Services, located on eastend St. Denis Street, is "the most sophisticated of its kind anywhere," says Antoine Samuelli, the school's director-general.

"There are none, even in Europe, with the physical facilities and the capacity for management training that we have here."

The 12-storey, double-wing building has four floors of custom-designed classrooms, labs and food-service facilities, in one section and a 42-room, professionally equipped training hotel, the Hotel de l'Institut, in the other.

It has 40 regular rooms, two suites, bar and banquet facilities, underground parking and a large dining room specializing in European cuisine.

During the year about 40 students at a time work six-week shifts running the hotel, which is open to the public.

All of the school's 800 full-time students have been placed in summer jobs, including 70 or 80 who are working for the Olympic Organizing Committee. There are also about 4,500 part-time students.

The cost of all programs, including student tuition and salaries for a staff of 196 full-time and 70 part-time employees, is borne by a $5.2-million annual operating grant from the department of tourism.

Enrolment requirements are strict—only one in three applicants is accepted—but the school plans to increase the number of full-time students to 1,200.

Courses include hotel administration, food and beverage management, professional cooking, accounting, marketing and legislative regulations.

Mr. Samuelli estimates that the burgeoning hotel and restaurant industries need 9,000 new operational and management personnel annually.

"We want to encourage those who dream, think and breathe hospitality and food service management," said Mr. Samuelli.

The restaurant and hotel industries are demanding, requiring long hours of dealing with the public, he added.

But the tourist industry, which generated $1.2 billion last year, isn't without its rewards since professional chefs can work their way up to executive positions with a salary potential of $35,000.

Boom Towns Emerge in China

HONG KONG — Little noticed by outsiders, the Chinese countryside has begun to produce dozens of new boomtowns, whose populations and industries are growing at a pace rivaling that of the opening of the American West.

Recent travellers to China interviewed here and in the United States say the explosive development of rail junction towns scattered about the country is altering the lives of millions of rural Chinese in ways Western analysts are just beginning to understand.

Given the distrust that Chairman Mao Tse-tung has often expressed about the temptations of urban life, Chinese officials probably have mixed feelings about the boom towns. The "Watch Us Grow" signs favored by ambitious city fathers in the United States in the earlier part of this century are not to be found in the People's Republic.

Nonetheless, reports from travellers and analysis of the Chinese press indicates that at least 40 to 50 cities of 100,000 population or more are experiencing rapid growth.

A newly available draft of a report by a team of American social scientists and engineers given a rare look at some of the booming areas last summer argues that the development is likely to speed the pace of modernization throughout China's farming areas. The influx of former peasants into towns' new plants, businessmen and economists here say, may significantly narrow the centuries-old gap between China's cities and its vast countryside.

The new boom towns result in part from the strict limits placed on the populations of China's biggest cities — Peking, Shanghai, Canton and the other metropolises that visiting foreigners are most likely to see. By fits and starts, through restricting grain coupons, work permits and factory expansion in the big cities and sending millions of young people out to the farms, the Chinese government has triggered what appears now to be a rapid decentralization of industry and people to smaller cities and towns.

To recent travellers, the new boom-towns look raw and unkept. Hsinhsiang, in northern Honan Province, has gone from 57,000 people in 1949 to 320,000 in 1965 to 420,000 in 1972. "With cramped housing, dirt alleys and some mud brick houses, it looked much like an overgrown country town," said the draft report of the American Rural Small-Scale Industry Delegation led by Harvard economist Dwight Perkins.

"The main streets were torn up as a new storm sewer system was being installed. And, in contrast to the beautiful tree-lined boulevards at the provincial seat of Cheng-chou, just a few tens of kilometers to the south, the trees in Hsinhsiang were just beginning to grow," said the report, based on a tour of Chinese factories last summer.

The massive population shift has been obscured by the continuing political debate over who should succeed aging Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

Western analysts have also been handicapped in identifying the new pockets of rapid growth because of the Chinese reluctance to publish any significant population or economic data since the late 1950s.

Analysts here suggest that the spread of industries to the countryside is in part a way for the Chinese to ensure that they can absorb nuclear attack. But the report of the American team of social scientists puts more emphasis on the need of the Chinese economy to make farming areas self-sufficient and reduce reliance on subsidies from state funds and manufactured goods from distant cities. Rural communes and local governments have been told to try to make their own tools and consumer goods and have begun to set up hundreds of small factories making everything from hand tractors to toothbrushes.

"Those are the places I'd like to get out to," said Hong Kong-based merchant who has travelled in China but so far the Chinese have been unwilling to invite many foreigners to the new boom towns.

"One of our guides in the provinces suggested that there were six or seven other medium-size cities in Honan Province which were growing just as fast as Hsinhsiang," the American social scientists reported, while "The provincial capital Chengchou maintained a constant 700,000 to 900,000 population since 1958."

PEN PLANT OPENING

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Prisoners at nearby Joyceville penitentiary embark today on an unusual industrial project.

"The first product off the line will be metal clothing lockers for sale to the federal department of supply and services," Thorvardson said. The plant will diversify later.

Thorvardson said only 15 prisoners will be taken on the assembly line during the initial training stage.

"We're on schedule to begin our three-month training period Monday," said Barry Thorvardson, assistant director of administration.

Competition for the available jobs was designed "much like the public service staffing system." Openings were advertised, the men filled out the application forms and finally were interviewed.

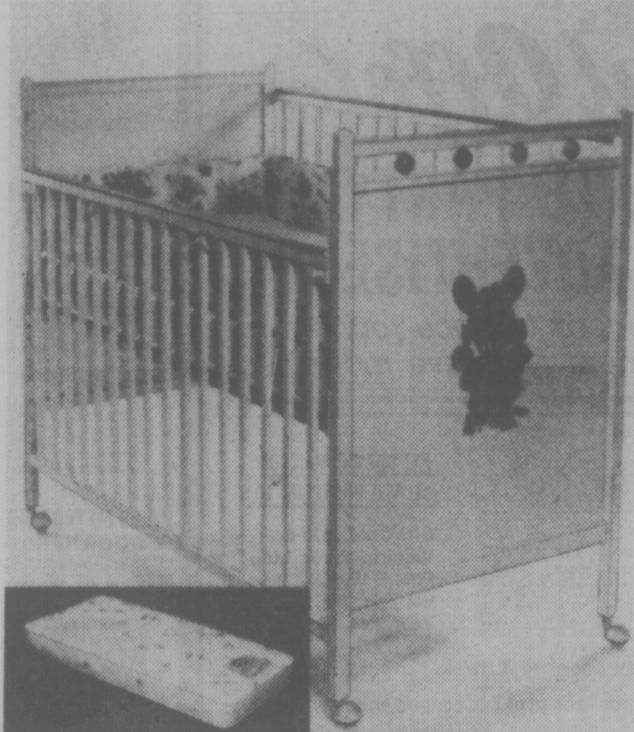

"All the positions haven't been advertised yet, so we don't know what our total response will be."

Wage scales for the positions will range from $1.25 an hour to the federal minimum wage of $2.90 an hour.

Island Fares 'Fine Tuned'

The B.C. government has quietly rolled back ferry fares by 25 per cent on the Tsawwassen-Gulf Islands run in an effort to "fine tune" ferry rates, a B.C. Ferries official said today.

Bill Bouchard, assistant traffic manager, said the decreases, which took effect Friday, will bring uniformity to the fare structure for the Gulf Islands.

Passengers now pay the regular price of $4 a person and $10 a car for the trip to the islands from Tsawwassen but are charged only $2 and $5 respectively for the return trip.

Bouchard said the rates were reduced to reflect the shorter trip of the islands run compared with the Tsawwassen to Swartz Bay route.

The reductions were unannounced.

A ferry spokesman said earlier the rate was not reduced on the trip to the Gulf Islands because passengers then would have been able to ride to the remaining distance to Victoria free on the Gulf Islands-Swartz Bay ferries.

Passengers on that run pay for a round-trip ticket when boarding at Swartz Bay so there is no charge for the return ride.

Spokesman Pat Fraser said she knew of no plans for fare reductions on other routes.

Ten world records tumbled, East Germany climbed to the top of the gold-medal list and a few unheralded athletes scored upsets in an action-packed weekend at Montreal that pushed the 21st Olympic Games past the halfway point.

Fifty gold medals were awarded in the two days of competition, 15 of them to the East Germans, whose total stood at 26 with 104 events completed. The Soviet Union had 25 and the United States 21.

There was still no gold for Canada, which ran its medal total to eight with a silver and three bronzes. Page 14.

Flood Control Aid Up

Ottawa (CP) — The federal government announced today an increase to $60 million from $30.5 million and an extension to 16 from 10 years of an agreement with British Columbia to build dams to control floods along the Fraser River and its tributaries.

The environment department said in a statement that under the flood agreement, dykes have been built along the Fraser at Agassiz, Harrison Mills, Matsqui and dams have been rehabilitated on the Serpentine and Nicomekl rivers.

Dams are underway at three other spots and with the additional budget, it should be possible to build nine others before the agreement ends in 1984.

MONTREAL (CP) — The RCMP is taking seriously international reports that international terrorists are on their way to disrupt the Olympic Games here, according to the Toronto Star.

The newspaper quotes an unnamed force spokesman as saying that the RCMP security and intelligence squad is "seriously investigating" the report, although no concrete developments have come out of the investigation so far.

"We obtained our information through regular channels as well as international news agencies," The Star quotes him as saying.

"But the information we have is too sketchy and not confirmed. It will take several days before we will be able to say anything definite."

The information indicated the terrorists would stop over in Australia, the newspaper says.

In Australia, strict security precautions were in effect today at the country's international airports in Sydney and Melbourne to prevent terrorists from entering the country.

Police in Melbourne have said security has been doubled at airports and offices have been told to treat foreign passengers with suspicion.

The maximum alert was maintained Sunday after reports that Interpol, the international police organization, had learned that a terrorist group of five men and a woman disappeared from Germany about two days ago and was heading for Australia.

The RCMP has officially denied reports they were investigating the arrival of three terrorists in Montreal.

Palestinian terrorists killed 11 members of the Israeli Olympic delegation in Munich in 1972.

Amid unconfirmed reports that a 14-year-old Romanian gymnastics gold medalist Nadia Comaneci has received threats against her life, Games security officials have provided protection for a number of top athletes including the Romanian gymnast.

The report came in the wake of a spate of rumors that Arab terrorists were in Montreal and the discovery Friday that a friend of Canadian sprinter Robert Martin had been living in the Olympic Village without accreditation.

This has led observers to question the supposedly impregnable ring-manned by 16,000 police and armed forces personnel who guard the Village and competition sites.

An RCMP spokesman told a reporter that a terrorist suicide assault on the Village would have "less than a 50 per cent chance of success."

SCALPERS REAP HUGE PROFITS

MONTREAL (CP) — Police have set up a 21-man squad to curb the growing number of scalpers selling Olympic tickets at exorbitant prices.

"The situation will get worse because the finals of many competitions are approaching and people are screaming for tickets," a police spokesman said. "Americans don't mind paying up to $200 for a ticket."

Of the more than 100 scalpers who work around the Olympic stadium, about 50 are considered to be professionals who earn a living following major events around the world where they can sell tickets for a profit, he said.

"One of the pros is reported to have made $25,000 on the opening day. Others are believed to be making around $5,000 a day," said the policeman.

Working in plainclothes 12 hours a day, the squad is helped by the rest of the security staff who radio in the different locations of the scalpers.

"We weren't prepared for all these scalpers. We figured there would be some scalping but not on such a large scale," said the policeman.

Closing day ceremony tickets are reportedly going for $500, he said.

Gens de l'Air de Quebec, a French-language air workers group, will go to court to challenge federal regulations governing the use of French in air communications, the group's president said Saturday.

Roger Demers said in a telephone interview that the regulations, which forbid the use of French in air communications except at six small Quebec airports, are "unnecessary and unconstitutional."

"We've lived without this order for some years, why do we need it now?"

He accused the government of giving in to "intimidation, threats and illegal strikes" by the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association (CALPA) and the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association (CATCA), both of which have been pressing Ottawa for an English-only order.

"People are reacting to the language dispute by thinking the Gens de l'Air want to exclude English from control towers," he said.

The Gens de l'Air has criticized the manner in which the commission was set up last month and the terms of reference it was given, saying the federal government bowed to pressure from CATCA and CALPA.

Former environment minister Jean Marchand resigned from the federal cabinet because he could not support the government's position.

Delmer said the Gens de l'Air's general council is to meet this week to decide what action the group will take against the regulations, but Demers said it is unlikely that French pilots and air controllers will stage work disruptions.

He said that negotiations between the Gens de l'Air and the transport department would continue, but that no date has been fixed for a meeting.

Plane Strafes Ship

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — A South African coastal trading ship was strafed by an airplane off the Mozambique coast Saturday, the ship's captain said Sunday.

Captain Paul Rugg said the ship was six miles off the Mozambique coast and 12 miles from the South African border when the attack occurred shortly after noon Saturday.

Rugg said he ordered the 15 Zulu crewmen below decks and the five white officers took cover on the bridge. No one was injured.

"The plane made about eight separate attacks at just above mast height and held its fire until it was 25 to 30 metres away," he said. "Then it let go with sporadic bursts from what appeared to be a 7.62 mm. machine gun fired from a hatch by one of the three men in the aircraft."

The ship was struck by about 60 bullets, Rugg said.

"We couldn't see the nationality of the three men nor can we remember what the markings on the plane were," he said.

Rugg said the ship was carrying general cargo on a regular run from Mozambique to Durban.

Amin Flees from Angry Soldiers

Amin's army was now thoroughly demoralized, because soldiers have been fed only bananas for the last few weeks.

There was no confirmation of the report, just as there has been no confirmation of previous reports in Nairobi newspapers of mutinies in the Ugandan army. But the persistence of such reports is fueling speculation in Nairobi that Amin's hold on power is threatened.

Amin on Sunday accused Kenya of imposing an economic blockade that has reduced Uganda to a gasoline supply sufficient only to operate emergency vehicles for five days. He said he may be forced to resort to desperate action."

Foreign Minister Munyua Waiyaki replied that Kenya will defend itself if attacked. "But we have no interest in fighting Uganda," he added.

Uganda normally gets its petroleum products from the Kenyan refinery at Mombasa. The Kenyans say they have

White House Invader Shot

WASHINGTON (AP) — A man carrying a three-foot section of pipe climbed over the White House fence late Sunday and was fatally shot by a guard when he failed to heed orders to halt, a Secret Service spokesman said.

The man, identified as Chester Plummer, 30, of Washington, died at George Washington Hospital soon after being admitted, the spokesman said.

John Carlson, deputy White House press secretary, said President Ford was in the second floor family quarters of the White House at the time. He had no immediate comment.

Jack Warner, a member of the Secret Service, said Plummer set off an alarm when he scaled the fence and a member of the Executive Protection Service went to investigate.

Warner said Plummer was fatally wounded by a single shot after he disregarded repeated orders to stop. He was about 60 feet inside the fence when the shot was fired.

He was "apparently a loner who was estranged from his family," police said.

Sgt. Robert Sharkey, head of the D.C. police investigation of the shooting incident, said little was known about Plummer. Chester Plummer, Sr., identified the body of his son.

A witness said the man climbed over the fence on the Pennsylvania Avenue side of the White House and was carrying a three-foot section of pipe that he was using as a cane.

Rightist radio reported two members of the Saudi Arabian and Sudanese force were killed and two others were wounded.

Meanwhile, heavy fighting flared overnight and this morning around the Palestinian refugee camp of Tal Zaatar, preventing the rescue of survivors when the roof collapsed on 500 persons in an underground shelter Saturday.

The spokesman gave no casualty figure, but said Palestinian guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat had been misinformed when he said earlier that 500 women and children had been killed.

Ziad Abdel Fattah, a spokesman for the Palestinian news agency said only 15 children have been saved from the shelter so far.

NAIROBI (AP) — Ugandan President Idi Amin fled from his headquarters in Kampala, the Ugandan capital, when a group of angry troops approached and firing broke out Saturday night, a Nairobi newspaper reported today.

The Standard, in a dispatch attributed to Kampala correspondent, said that at the outbreak of shooting, crowds watching a nearby soccer match fled while Amin "melted away into the cover of darkness."

Shortly after the disturbance

Amin told the Ugandan Defence Council he had decided to take a leave of absence outside the country, but the council overruled him.

Amin, who has escaped numerous coup attempts in the last five years, has been in hiding since the latest attempt on his life, while senior officers and civilians held discussions on how best he could step down, The Standard reported.

A second Kenyan newspaper, the Daily Nation, said

750 Fish Stories

Seven hundred and fifty young fishermen and women were after the big one Saturday at the 26th annual Victoria playgrounds fishing derby.

The youngsters lined the Ogden Point breakwater (left) during the three-hour derby, fishing for the big one worth a trophy and transistor radio.

Norman Apro, 7, of 4119 Barrington, Saanich (bottom), eventually took the prize with a two-pound 12-ounce ratfish.

Fourteen-year-old Dean Schabatowski of 1327 Cubbintree Ave., won the biggest prize, though, when he headed the 10 hidden-weight prize winners with a one-ounce winner. He was awarded a 10-speed bicycle and radio.

Other hidden-weight winners included:

(2) Diana Scott, 11, of 477 Lampson, half-ounce fish, transistor radio; (3) Paula Dibski, 4, 2096 Kendal, two-ounce fish, $15 gift certificate; (4) Danny Matthews, 13, 341 Mann, four-ounce fish, tackle box; (5) Paul Grootendorst, 9, 791 McKenzie, one-ounce fish, fishing rod set; (6) Donny Morgan, 9, 2409 Chambers, half-ounce fish, fishing rod set; (7) Jennifer Roberts, 10, 640 Oliver, one-ounce fish, fishing rod set; (8) Gregg Phillips, 14, 1120 Temple, one-ounce fish, fishing rod set.

Alderman Denies Links With Project Developer

Victoria Ald. Bob Wright today denied charges by a city council colleague, Ald. Ron McKenzie, that he has professional, personal and political links with developer Hans Hartwig, and that he is "bulldozing" Hartwig's plans for a Wharf Street development through council.

Wright was commenting on an article in last Saturday's Victoria Times in which McKenzie alleged that Wright, Hartwig and someone in the provincial government are involved in "political incest" surrounding the project.

In the Times interview, McKenzie questioned why the provincial government suddenly appeared anxious for the developer's plans to proceed unobstructed.

He claimed Wright and Hartwig are friends and also have a business connection, because a company in which the latter has a financial interest leases space from Wright's firm at Oak Bay Marina.

Wright denied, however, he has any special relationship with the developer. He said Hartwig had purchased shares in Oak Bay Marine Sales and Service Ltd. but he (Wright) was not privy to the purchase.

As for the claimed friendship, he said, he doesn't know Hartwig any better than the Times reporter who wrote the original article, and said Hartwig has never visited his home.

"What's a friend? I have thousands of friends in this town."

Wright said if he felt there could have been some conflict of interest, he would have disclosed himself from city council discussion on the matter last week.

He accused McKenzie of "character assassination by innuendo," adding:

"His public utterances in this case are irresponsible. I believe aldermen and all politicians for that matter are under a duty to check things out before making accusations."

Wright said McKenzie was well aware that he (Wright) had been instructed to investigate Hartwig's proposals on the basis of the heritage implications involved and the project's impact on the architectural scale of Wharf Street.

"That was basically my involvement," he added.

"In this particular case I had two main interests — a desire that the waterfront in the Inner Harbor be protected and a heritage designation bylaw.

He expressed concern that council was being asked to endorse removal of the protective legislation without having an opportunity to view the developer's plans and before a land-use contract had been drafted.

Wright, however, said he had not asked for any vote. All that happened was that Mayor Mike Young requested a motion from council.

The motion was to authorize Young to ask the Capital Improvement District Commission for the land freeze to be lifted "only after the city got what it wanted in negotiations with the developer."

Answering McKenzie's point on the provincial government's interest in Hartwig's project, Wright said as far as he knows there is no such interest.

And he stressed he has no connection with the government or any individual in it.

McKenzie had implied that the developer was being let off scot-free from providing any parking for his development, he said, but if the alderman had done his homework he would know that the harbor commercial zoning category requires no parking for either commercial or residential uses.

Wright said Hartwig's proposal for the area should be judged on its merits.

"If the alderman feels he has a conflict of interest he has the proper legal means to pursue that end, rather than this overzealousness for publicity," he added.

"In this particular case I

Breakfast Blues on the Sechelt Queen

One morning last week we grabbed a fast cup of coffee, then set off to catch the 7:15 a.m. Comox-Powell River ferry with pleasant thought of breakfast on board.

The Queen of Sechelt, an elderly bottom once owned by Puget Sound Navigation Company, would normally have swallowed the pitiful eight-vehicle lineup quick as cat. But a large, awkward house trailer slowed what would otherwise have been a brisk departure.

No matter! Waiting is sauce for appetite. Even though served on cardboard plates, our scrambled eggs and brown sausages would taste all the better for the delay.

Ferry under way, we headed for the cafeteria. There wasn't any. Instead, we found ourselves staring in sheer disbelief at a coin-operated sandwich dispenser.

"Where are my sausages and eggs?" Win demanded in tragic tones. A passing crewman spared her an ironic smile.

"They're an hour and a quarter away," he said, and pointed in the direction of Powell River.

We fed quarters into the machine for two stale and wretched sandwiches at a dollar apiece.

Mine purported to be bacon and egg. Its plastic wrapper was splattered with a blue stain, which had worked its way through to the sandwich.

"What did you get?" I asked Win.

"I'm not sure," she said gloomily. "I think they're recycled the cardboard plates."

This was hardly an auspicious start for a trip that had already cost us $20 — the two-spot for the sad sandwiches, plus $18 for the one-way ferry ride. Add to the brigand tariff the fact that the Queen of Sechelt was uncommonly like a ghost-ship with her skeleton crew and diminished passenger list, and we were glad to get off her.

Twenty-odd miles south of Powell River along the Mainland shore, we again availed ourselves of British Columbia's once-proud ferry service. This was for a crossing of Jervis Inlet mouth from Salteray Bay to Earls Cove at the tip of the Sechelt Peninsula. The cost: $18 return.

At this point we did what many a traveler is now doing — begin to worry about the way our transport charges were mounting. We'd hoped to attend to our business down the peninsula then go on to Vancouver by way of the Langdale ferry, and home to Vancouver Island on the Horseshoe Bay run.

But that would mean another pair of over-inflated ferry fares. So we ruled out Vancouver.

The Sechelt Peninsula motel where we put up that night displayed its "Vacancy" sign.

For the first time in our summer poking along a route we like, we had our choice of units. Tourist traffic was running light, as a forlorn placard on the door of a closed roadside restaurant made plain.

"Ferry rates up," the message announced, reduced hours ran. "Tourist traffic down."

We came home a day earlier than we'd planned. Total ferry cost for the four water-crossings involved: $54.

And that, I suggest, isn't merely a drastic over-charge for what is, or should be, merely two links in B.C.'s surface transport system. It's highway robbery.

We have been given various smooth explanations of why coast tourist traffic is sagging. The Olympic Games have been cited, also the American Bicentennial, and Lord help us, the weather.

Piffle! Our provincial government insults the intelligence of British Columbians when it attempts

GOV'T CONTRACTS GONE

Yarrows Yard To Cut Staff

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The Victoria shipyard of Yarrows Ltd. will have to lay off 250 men by September because of a lack of new government contracts, local general manager Don Challinor said.

He said the present work force of 500 will have to be reduced 50 per cent once the remaining government work is completed.

The Victoria shipyard is completing work on the Queen of Cowichan which is scheduled to join the B.C. Ferries fleet at the end of August.

It is also completing work on two smaller ferries for the Burrard Inlet crossing. These two vessels will also be ready for delivery at the end of August.

Challinor said the company relied heavily upon provincial and federal government contracts and the outlook is bleak because of curtailed spending programs by both levels of government.

Contracts at the shipyard have been the mainstay of the company's operations, along with some occasional work for the oil industry.

Work at the shipyard hit a peak this spring when the company was refitting two oil drilling ships for Dome Petroleum.

There are indications of some provincial government repair contracts as well as the usual number of foreign vessels.

"If a very large repair job comes in we will need more than 250 men for a short period of time. The total will fluctuate but shouldn't go much lower than 200 to 250," Challinor said.

Problems in the shipyard industry are not confined to Victoria, he said, but are part of a national problem as a result of government cutbacks in spending.

Because of relatively high wage rates, a large portion of shipyard work comes from government contracts rather than private enterprise.

The outlook for the shipyard industry is further complicated by the fact the B.C. Ferries fleet may have a surplus of vessels for some years unless there is an increase in traffic on the main runs between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

$4,000 DAMAGE

Damage was estimated at $4,000 after fire Sunday broke out in a home at 2589 Graham.

Cause of the fire, which started in a utility room, is not known.

Cougar's Anonymity Mystifies Scientists

Why doesn't the cougar — great cat of the forests and mountains — figure in the legends of coastal Indians?

This is a question for which anthropologists can't find an answer. The Indians can't help. They don't know either.

It's a puzzle, says Randy Bouchard, director of the B.C. Indian Language Project, because all major animals — the wolf, bear, deer, whale, otter, even the frog and pesky mosquito have a place in Indian myths.

Jimmy was apparently padding around the spit, but as he reached the point, the changing ebb tide started to drag the boat out to sea, and he jumped in an effort to make it to shore.

The spokesman said the tide runs at about six knots at its peak off the spit.

nored because Indians disliked and considered the animal dangerous.

She points out that logging provided a habitat more favorable to the cougar.

This makes sense to some experts who point out that even today loggers who have worked all their lives in the woods have never seen a cougar.

What the cougar population was when the entire coast and islands were covered by giant trees no one will ever know, but life must have been hard on the cougars, which depend largely on deer for survival.

Mrs. Turner has one other theory. And that is some of the supernatural animals mentioned in Indian legends may be the cougar.

"But this would require more study," she said.

AD CAMPAIGN NEEDS $32,000

A campaign to raise $50,000 by noon Tuesday to promote Victoria had drawn 137 pledges totalling $18,000 as of Sunday night, Rick Truman said today.

Further pledges are coming in today and there is no question we could eventually raise $50,000 but we are rapidly running out of time," he said.

The money would be used to buy air time for six commercials to play on Vancouver radio stations. The commercials would play every hour on all stations.

Truman, whose company created the song and the commercials, said there is still an outside chance that the minimum $50,000 could be reached by the Tuesday evening deadline.

"I am delighted by the number of individuals who are pledging funds but we need more support from companies in Victoria."

His company was contacting a number of large Victoria firms today in hopes of meeting the target.

Truman said, to be effective, a minimum of $50,000 worth of radio time would have to be purchased to play the commercials in the Vancouver area.

He said department of travel studies have shown that the number of tourists is normal from the U.S. but is down sharply from the Lower Mainland.

Truman said he would ex-
